In 1935, Dudley and Virginia Aist bought 3.7 hectares (9.33 acres) of land which had been subdivided from the tract owned by Charles and Edna Wilcox. A house was constructed on the land circa 1935. The property, consisting of the house and 2.4 hectares (6 acres), were purchased by Luther and Arlene Wise in 1957. In 1964, the property was sold to Charlotte Pitts. ## 8. Significance (Continued)

T.B. was in danger of decline by the end of the nineteenth century. During the 1870s and 1880s, both the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad and the Southern Maryland and Point Lookout Railroad had bypassed T.B. in favor of the village of Brandywine, located two miles to the east. Businesses and other activities favored this location, and T.B. remained a small, crossroads village serving only local farmers and travelers. William G. Becker tried to develop the "Littleworth" subdivision northwest of T.B. during the 1930s, however only a few lots were ever developed. Several dwellings were constructed around the periphery of the village between 1930 and 1950. In 1927, the Governor Crain Highway, now Route 301, was constructed along a new alignment immediately east of T.B. In 1950 Maryland Route 5, which formerly followed Brandywine Road north of T.B. and Old Brandywine Road south of T.B., was moved to a new alignment immediately east of Brandywine Road. Although Route 5 did not result in extensive demolition, T.B. failed quickly after its construction (MHT, PG:85A-33).

The house on the Charles and Edna Wilcox Property is an example of a contemporary Cape Cod residence. The mid-twentieth century contemporary Cape Cod, a particular adaptation of the vernacular massed-plan, first appeared in the mid-1920s (Rebeck 1987 "Subdivisions" section, 16). As a relatively inexpensive house to build, it became moderately popular during the Depression and the 1930s (Ibid.). When the Government Issue Bill of 1944 made it possible for veterans to borrow 100% of a home's value, the single-family dwelling became accessible to an unprecedented number of families (Wright 1981, 242-43). The contemporary Cape Cod subsequently became a standard suburban form in most eastern metropolitan areas. This was the form chosen by Abraham Levitt for the 17,450 suburban dwellings his company constructed in Levittown, Long Island between 1947 and 1951 (Wright 1981, 251-252). As arranged by Levitt & Sons, the contemporary Cape Cod was three-bays wide and one-story tall with a steeply-pitched side-gable roof, often later finished as a half story. The exterior had little detail, with only faint references to Colonial Revival and Modernist architecture. The interior took the open plan of the Bungalow a step further, dividing the house into an "activity zone" and a "quiet zone." The activity zone consisted of a kitchen, dining area and living area, often only loosely separated by half walls, built-in cabinets, and a central fireplace. The quiet zone contained two bedrooms and a bath, all opening off of a hall (Wright 1981, 254). The contemporary Cape Cod was designed to suit a housewife's life. Low-maintenance materials and modern appliances lessened the amount of housework needed, while the open living, dining and kitchen areas allowed the family, particularly women and children, to be together through most of their daily activities (Kelly, II-151-52). Due to their original small size, most Cape Cod dwellings were later enlarged and altered.

National Register Evaluation:

Constructed circa 1935, the Dudley and Virginia Aist Property is not eligible for the National Register of Historic Places. The property is not eligible under Criterion A, as research conducted indicates no association with any historic events or trends significant in the development of national, state, or local history. Historic research indicates that the property has no association with persons who have made specific contributions to history, and therefore, it does not meet Criterion B. It is not eligible under Criterion C, as it is a ubiquitous building type which lacks architectural significance. The house is not a significant example of mid-twentieth century design. In addition, the material integrity of the building has been compromised by the application of vinyl siding. Finally, the structure has no known potential to yield important information, and therefore, is not eligible under Criterion D.
