DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This is an interesting example of a local tobacco barn style that is fast disappearing. The central portion is a smaller, two-story barn, with a very-steeply pitched A-roof. The gabled facade has horizontal weatherboards on the gable end, and vertical siding elsewhere. A hip-roofed shed apron, beginning at the eaves of the main barn, slopes gradually out from the center on all four sides of the building. This flares the roof out, until it is about eight feet above the ground on the outside perimeter. The outside wall has vertical siding, with several doors. The main timbers and drying poles here are separate from those of the main barn.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

A good example of a now-rare type of Southern Maryland tobacco barn. This was a popular method of extending barn space many years ago.
