Private

Located approximately one-quarter mile northwest of the Talbot County town of Wye Mills, the house and outbuildings stand on the west side of Wye Mills Road in Queen Anne's County. Built circa 1900 with a major addition made circa 1970, the two-story, five-bay, frame, side-gable house features a two-story, full-width, Colonial Revival-style front porch. A two-story, frame wing extends to the west from the north elevation. One historic outbuilding, four non-historic outbuildings, and a non-historic swimming pool stand west and south of the house.

The Wolcott-Schiwy House illustrates the importance of agriculture in Queen Anne's County history and is an example of a small farm that has been operated by tenants as well as by owners. In 1896, Charles and Elizabeth Wolcott purchased the farm and added to the existing tenant house. During most of the first half of the twentieth century, the farmhouse was owner-occupied. By the late 1960s, the farmhouse was abandoned, but the surrounding land remained under cultivation. The evolution of the house's form illustrates the adaptation of the existing dwelling to suit new owners and current styles.

Summary

Located approximately one-quarter mile northwest of the Talbot County town of Wye Mills, the house and outbuildings stand on the west side of Wye Mills Road in Queen Anne's County. Built circa 1900 with a major addition made circa 1970, the two-story, five-bay, frame, side-gable house features a two-story, full-width, Colonial Revival-style front porch. A two-story, frame wing extends to the west from the north elevation. One historic outbuilding, four non-historic outbuildings, and a non-historic swimming pool stand west and south of the house.

Description

Surrounded by agricultural fields, the house and outbuildings are located on the west side of Wye Mills Road on a 38-acre lot. The house is situated on a level area of a grassy lot with scattered mature trees that slopes down to Wye Mills Road. An asphalt driveway extends west from Wye Mills Road up a slope, through an allee of cedar trees, and along the south side of the house to a "T" intersection. The driveway turns north to the garage, located immediately to the west of the house, and turns south toward the agricultural outbuildings and swimming pool. The southern portion of the driveway then curves southeast and goes down a hill to Wye Mills Road; this section of the driveway accesses a gravel lot to the south and west of the sheds and barn.

Exterior

The house was constructed during at least three building campaigns between the last quarter of the nineteenth century and the late twentieth century. The two-story, five-bay, side-gable, center-passage, main block reflects all three periods of construction. The earliest structure, built circa 1880 on a brick foundation, comprises the center stairhall and the northwest room. This room included an interior brick chimney centered on the north wall; the chimney base remains in the basement. Circa 1900, the building was raised from one-and-one-half to two stories and expanded by the addition of a two-room rear ell. Circa 1970, a two-bay, single-pile, two-story addition was constructed to the south of the stairhall, and the entrance and windows for the northwest room became the northern three bays of the five-bay façade. The north chimney was removed at this time.

The two-story, five-bay house stands on a continuous, common-bond, brick foundation. The walls are clad in aluminum siding. The gable roofs are covered in asphalt shingles and have a boxed wood cornice with returns. An exterior, double-flue, brick chimney stands at the south end of the main block. A full-width, shed-roofed porch shelters the front elevation. The two-story porch is supported by four square wood posts, and has a brick floor and centered brick steps. A two-story addition in the corner of the main block and rear ell is attached to a one-story, enclosed porch that covers the first story of the ell's south elevation. A brick patio stands in the southwest corner between the enclosed porch and south room on the main block; brick steps provide access to the porch and to the south room.

The façade (east elevation) features five bays. The center bay contains a circa 1900, four-panel, wood door with arched top panels. The door surround is composed of a three-light, fixed, wood transom; three-light-over-one-panel sidelights; and a chamfered and fluted casing. The windows are six-over-six, double-hung, wood sash windows with metal storm windows and affixed, metal, louvered shutters. The three northern bays are evenly spaced, while the two southern windows are set further from the door than the northern windows are. The five bays of the second story align with the first story bays. On the second story, the three north bays contain one-over-one, double-hung, wood sash windows; the two south bays have six-over-six, double-hung, wood sash windows. Molded wood trim surrounds the windows and doors on all elevations.

The north elevation of the main block features two symmetrically placed windows on each story that match the six-over-six, wood sash windows on the façade. The gable contains a centered double casement window and a louvered vent in the peak. The rear ell and two-story corner addition cover more than half of the west elevation. The south bay of this elevation (located in the main block) features a triple sliding-glass door on the first story, and a small, six-over-six, double-hung window that matches the others in trim and shutters on the second story. The south elevation features an exterior, brick chimney with shoulders that broadens to the west to include a corner opening about three-and-one-half-feet above the ground for grilling.

Statement of Significance

The Wolcott-Schiwy House illustrates the importance of agriculture in Queen Anne's County history and is an example of a small farm that has been operated by tenants as well as by owners. In 1896, Charles and Elizabeth Wolcott purchased the farm and added to the existing tenant house. During most of the first half of the twentieth century, the farmhouse was owner-occupied. By the late 1960s, the farmhouse was abandoned, but the surrounding land remained under cultivation. The evolution of the house's form illustrates the adaptation of an existing dwelling to suit new owners and current styles.

Narrative

Located approximately one-quarter mile northwest of the Talbot County town of Wye Mills, the Wolcott-Schiwy House stands on land that was owned by Talbot County residents during the third and fourth quarters of the nineteenth century. John R. Hopkins, a prosperous Talbot County farmer who owned the mills at Wye Mills (see T-51, Wye Mill and QA-580, Wye Mills Survey District), owned the property until his death in the 1880s.¹ In 1887, his heirs sold the property to another Talbot County farmer, Thomas Quimby.² During the ownership of Hopkins and Quimby, the 39-acre tract was likely farmed by a tenant who lived in the side-passage building that survives as the north portion of the main block of the current house. Nineteenth-century historic maps of the county do not indicate any buildings at this location, but modest tenant houses such as this one were not always depicted on these maps. Tenant farming was common in Queen Anne's County from the mid-nineteenth century through the early twentieth century. After the Civil War ended in 1865, many of the large plantations of antebellum Queen Anne's County were sub-divided into smaller farms or leased to tenants. As a result, new farm complexes and tenant houses were erected throughout the county. For most of the period between 1865 and 1930, half or more than half of the farmers in Queen Anne's County did not own the land they worked. The majority of these tenant farmers were white.³

In 1896, Charles H. Wolcott purchased the property. A New Jersey native, Wolcott was farming in Queen Anne's County by 1880.⁴ At that time, his household included his wife Elizabeth, four children, and a white servant named Nicholas Lawber. After purchasing the property, Wolcott expanded the existing tenant house, creating a two-story, side-gable, side-passage dwelling with a two-room rear ell.⁵ Agricultural outbuildings extant from the Wolcotts' ownership of the property include an equipment shed built circa 1900 and

The north elevation of the rear ell consists of three bays that are not symmetrically placed, but are aligned between the first and second stories. The two easternmost bays are close together and contain windows that match the six-over-six, wood sash windows of the main block. The west window opening holds a three-quarter-size window on the first story that matches the others in trim. The second-story windows match the other second-story windows. The west gable end of the ell features a two-over-two, double-hung, wood sash window with square-edged, wood surround and projecting sill.

A one-story, shed-roofed, addition extends across the south elevation of the ell. The west end of the addition contains a laundry room that is lit by one window matching the six-over-six wood sash windows, while the east end of the addition contains an enclosed porch with four, one-over-one, fixed, wood windows and a twelve-light storm door. The second story incorporates two windows that match the other second-story windows and are asymmetrically placed. The south slope of the ell roof contains solar panels.

Interior

The center hall plan of the main block consists of the circa 1880 stairhall and living room to the north, and the circa 1970 den to the south. The stairhall extends west through a vestibule with a step down to the enclosed porch. A door in the west wall of the living room leads to the dining room in the circa 1900 ell. The kitchen occupies the western end of the ell. Doors in the south wall of the kitchen lead to the porch and to the laundry room at the west end of the enclosed porch. The vestibule, porch, and laundry room were part of the circa 1970 building campaign, and may have replaced an earlier porch.

The center hall in the main block features an open-stringer stair on the south wall. The stair features a turned, wood newel post, a molded rail, turned wood balusters, and scroll-sawn spandrels. The floor is carpeted. Trim consists of an approximately four-inch baseboard with a beaded top edge; molded door surrounds with an interior beaded edge; molded astragal chair rail; and cyma crown molding. A bathroom occupies the area under the stairs.

The living room in the main block and the dining room in the ell exhibit the same circa 1900 trim as the center hall. Both rooms have even-width, pine flooring, and four-panel, wood doors between rooms. The dining room features Colonial Revival-style, built-in corner cupboards in the northeast and northwest corners; the cupboards were probably added during the circa 1970 renovation. The door trim in the kitchen matches that in the dining and living rooms, but there is a different molded chair rail, no crown molding, and vinyl tile on the floor.

The wall between the circa 1970 vestibule and the center hall was originally the exterior wall of the circa 1880 house; this wall is thicker than the west wall of the vestibule. The vestibule and the enclosed porch have built-in closets along their north walls and in the southeast corner of the porch. The corner closet and the doorway to the center hall have four-panel, wood doors that date to the circa 1900 house, and were moved to their current locations. The door between the porch and the kitchen matches the others except the top panels have been replaced with glass. Located in the south addition to the main block, the circa 1970 den features nine- to ten-inch-wide, pegged flooring; exposed beams; and a brick fireplace with a slate raised hearth and heavy wood mantel.

Outbuildings

Garage (NC)

Located directly to the west of the house, the circa 1970, one-story, front-gable garage is clad in aluminum siding and covered with a standing-seam metal roof. The south elevation contains a metal, roll-up door. A wood pedestrian door pierces the east elevation at the north end. A fenced dog kennel on a poured concrete pad extends from the north elevation.

Swimming Pool (NC) and Pool Pump House (NC)

Located south of the house, the pool and pump house were constructed after the circa 1970 renovation of the house. The pump house is a one-story, front-gable, frame structure with aluminum siding and a standing-seam metal roof. A metal door with square-edged metal trim pierces the south elevation. The rectangular, in-ground, concrete pool is surrounded by a low fence with metal railings.

Equipment Shed (C)

A one-story, L-shaped equipment shed stands southwest of the house and is composed of two historic sheds that are attached to each other. The older shed, constructed circa 1900, is a five-bay, side-gable, post-and-beam structure that is open to the south. The standing-seam metal roof is supported by heavy, square, wood posts on poured concrete bases. The floor is a mixture of poured concrete, stone dust, and dirt. The east and west elevations are clad in aluminum siding; the north elevation is sheathed in wood weatherboard.

The larger, circa 1940 shed extends north from the east side of the circa 1900 shed. The six-bay shed is constructed of similar materials, but the wood posts and concrete bases are of smaller dimensions. It is open to the east, and features a sliding door made of T-111 siding that is suspended from a track above the two north bays.

Pole Barn (NC)

A circa 1990, one-and-one-half-story, four-bay pole barn stands west of the equipment sheds. The barn is clad with metal siding and features a standing-seam metal roof with a center cupola.

Barn/Office (NC)

A barn with office addition are located south of the house and on the east side of the driveway. The circa 1900, two-story, three-bay, side-gable barn has been extensively remodeled to serve as a warehouse. It is clad with aluminum siding and has an asphalt shingle roof. The three-bay west elevation (front) incorporates a double door in the south bay and single doors in the center and north bays on the first story. The two-bay second story consists of single doors aligned above the center and south bays of the first story. A metal I-beam projects from the top of the south door.

The circa 1990, one-and-one-half-story, two-bay, gable-roofed office addition extends from the south (side) elevation of the barn; its roof ridge is aligned with that of the barn roof. Standing on a concrete block foundation, the building is clad in aluminum siding and has an asphalt shingle roof. The office addition's two-bay west elevation features six-over-six, double-hung, vinyl windows with vinyl trim and window boxes on the first story, and two gable-roofed dormers on the second story. The entrance is located in the center of the south gable end and is flanked by windows matching those on the west elevation. A similar window is centered in the gable.

possibly the barn, which has been extensively renovated. In 1910, Charles and Elizabeth Wolcott lived on the Wye Mills Road property with one of their sons.⁶

In 1916, Charles and Elizabeth Wolcott's daughter, Elizabeth Shortall, sold the property to James E. and Jennie Holden. In 1910, the Holdens and their nine children were renting a farm in the area; their purchase of the property marked their transition from tenant farmer to landowner.⁷ In 1920, James and Jennie Holden and their grandson, James, occupied the house and farmed the property.⁸

The Wolcotts and Holdens owned the farm during a period of agricultural change in Queen Anne's County. Between 1900 and 1920, farm acreage in Queen Anne's County decreased by 10,000 acres. A majority of farms were 100 to 259 acres in size, so the 616 Wye Mills tract of 39 acres was a small operation in comparison. The major crops produced in the county between 1900 and 1920 included corn, wheat, and hay; if the Wolcotts and Holdens raised these crops, their farm's proximity to the Wye Mills would have been convenient. After World War I, though, prices for wheat and corn dropped, and Maryland farmers diversified their crops and increased dairy production. Between 1880 and 1920, the number of dairy cattle in Queen Anne's County nearly tripled. Small farms also diversified by growing fruits and vegetables that were canned locally or shipped to Baltimore; with the development and use of motorized vehicles on farms, the vegetable-growing business became known as truck farming.⁹

In 1926, Benjamin C. Allen acquired the farm from James Holden's estate, and by 1930, Allen, his wife Mary, and twelve children were farming the property. When Allen died in 1945, the farm was conveyed to two of his children, Ethel and Percy, who were trustees for the estate. Only one outbuilding – an equipment shed – dates to the period when the Allens owned the property.

In 1953, the trustees sold the farm out of the family, and, by 1968, the house was vacant and in disrepair.¹⁰ Gunther and Regina Schiwy renovated the dwelling soon after purchasing the 39-acre farm in 1968. They expanded the main block to the south, creating a center hall plan. The five-bay façade was covered by a two-story, full-width, front porch that is derivative of the one at Mount Vernon. The Schiwys also constructed a two-story addition and enclosed porch on the southwest side of the house. The swimming pool, pool pump house, garage, office, and pole barn also date to the Schiwy ownership.
