St. James M.E. Church
Oriole vicinity
private

1885, c. 1900

Built in two stages, this combination frame church marks the intersection of the Champ and Oriole Roads. Set in the south pier of the main block is a marble plaque inscribed 1885, while the front towers and multi-pane windows were added around the turn of the twentieth century. The old exterior double-door entrance is clearly visible within the vestibule. The heavy molded four-panel doors are topped by a four-light transom. Most notable is the unconventional pair of multi-level bell and entrance towers separated by a single story gabled section pierced by a tripartite window. Directly west of the church is the accompanying cemetery with above grave markers.

DESCRIPTION SUMMARY

St. James Methodist Episcopal Church, built in two stages, is a single-story 1885 gable-roofed frame structure visually dominated by c. 1900 asymmetrical entrance towers that rise against the west elevation of the main block. Supported on a brick pier foundation, the building is sheathed with plain weatherboards, and the various gable roofs and tower are covered with asphalt shingles. Colored glass windows, framed by louvered shutters, light the sanctuary. The interior wall surfaces are finished with beaded board wainscoting and plaster, and plank pews fill the sanctuary. A balcony in the west end of the building is reached by an enclosed stair. The turned baluster balcony railing and altar railing are covered with a coat of graining in imitation of oak. Across Champ Road is a nineteenth and twentieth century cemetery, but is not included within the boundary as nominated.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

St. James Methodist Episcopal Church stands on the southeast corner of the intersection of Oriole Road (MD 627) and Champ Road in the vicinity of Oriole, Somerset County, Maryland. The single-story frame church faces west with the principal gable oriented on an east/west axis. Across Champ Road is a nineteenth and twentieth century cemetery.

Built in two stages, this two-part frame church is supported by a brick pier foundation, and it is sheathed with a uniform layer of plain weatherboards. The steeply pitched roofs are covered with asphalt tile shingles, and the eaves are extended. Dated to 1885, the main body of the church was enlarged with the addition of the front towers and entrances around the turn of the twentieth century.

The (west) main facade is an asymmetrical three-bay elevation with separate double-door entrances in the side bays; the northwestern entrance pierces a three-story bell tower, while the southwestern entrance is entered through a two-story tower covered with a gable roof. The entrances to each tower are filled with low-relief two-panel double doors. The second level of the northwestern entrance tower is marked by a multi-pane colored glass sash window, while the third level has long louvered openings on each side. The pyramidal roofed spire has flared eaves and gabled vents on each side. Small brackets mark the outside corners under the tower soffit. The two-story southwest entrance tower is covered by a plain gable-front roof, and a multi-pane colored glass sash window lights the second level. Lighting the upper gable of the main block is a small colored glass round window. Fixed in the southwest corner of the two-story tower is a marble datestone inscribed, "St. James M. E. Church." An earlier datestone of 1885 is set in the southwest front pier of the main block and carries the name, "St. John's Church."

Each side is three bays across, and large-sized colored glass windows fill each bay. Louvered shutters remain in place, and a narrow brick stove chimney rises through each side. Attached to the east (back) wall is a plain single-story apse with large colored glass windows piercing each side. Louvered shutters remain on these windows as well.

ST. JAMES METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
Oriole vicinity, Somerset County, Maryland

The interior survives with a large portion of its late nineteenth century finishes intact. The former center entrance is a double-door opening topped by a four-light colored glass transom now sheltered by the center gabled bay. The original exterior doors remain in place with low relief panels accented by an ogee molding. The interior door surround has a reeded flat surface and an ogee backband. The sanctuary walls are finished with a beaded board wainscoting with plaster above, and the sanctuary ceiling is plastered as well. Iron tie rods stretch across the sanctuary to help stabilize the side walls.

Fitted into the west end of the sanctuary is a balcony with a paneled knee wall topped by a turned baluster railing. Access to the balcony is provided by an enclosed staircase that rises in the northwest corner. The stair is enclosed with vertical tongue-and-groove boards. Plain plank pews remain on a tiered balcony platform.

The sanctuary itself is furnished with painted plank pews that have a gracefully curved end board. The altar is distinguished by a turned baluster railing anchored at each end by stout newel posts that retain a layer of oak graining. To the right of the altar is an elevated choir platform also defined by a turned baluster handrail. The choir railing is supported by chamfered corner newel posts which are finished with pyramidal post heads.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

St. James Methodist Episcopal Church is one of eighteen historic African-American churches recorded on the Somerset County inventory, and it is architecturally important as one of the most original with relatively intact exterior and interior finishes. Unlike most of the other churches in this group, St. James has not been used since the mid 1960s, thereby freeing it from many of the modern alterations that have been made to other churches for comfort or low maintenance concerns. The building has not been altered to any significant degree since the turn of the twentieth century and it is a rare, relatively intact survivor of late nineteenth century religious architecture as embraced by rural black congregations in Somerset County. Following in mainstream Methodism's devotion to the Gothic Revival as the proper style of church in which to worship, the St. James congregation opted for an asymmetrically designed front addition to an existing 1885 gable-front church. Towers of differing heights, incorporating entrances, flank a pointed arch tripartite window of colored glass. Inside the church, beaded waincoting and plaster finish the sanctuary walls. Remaining in the sanctuary are painted plank pews fitted with graceful curved end boards. The turned baluster altar rail and other interior woodwork retains a coat of oak graining.

HISTORIC CONTEXT

Like many rural black congregations in Somerset County, the history of St. James M. E. Church is not complete. The first record of a church at this location near the head of St. Peter's Creek dates to the early 1870s when the trustees of "Manokin Chapel," as the congregation was known at the time, purchased one-half acre of land from Isaac S. and Susan H. Atkinson. The Atkinsons were owners of "Almodington" during the fourth quarter of the nineteenth century. The conveyance states that:

the said Isaac S. Atkinson and Susan H. Atkinson his wife have granted bargained and sold and by these presents do grant bargain and sell unto the said Trustees of Manokin Chapel their heirs and successors forever all that tract or part of a tract of land wherein said Chapel now stands, situate and laying near the head of St. Peter's Creek in Somerset County, State of Maryland.

It seems reasonable to believe that the congregation of Manokin Chapel had erected a church on this site probably within a short time prior to this transaction, and they moved to secure legal title to the land. An exact date of formation for the congregation has not been found.

HISTORIC CONTEXT

ST. JAMES M. E. CHURCH

Oriole vicinity, Somerset County, Maryland

Four years following this deed, the church and an adjacent school were identified on the Princess Anne district map in the 1877 Lake, Griffing, and Stevenson atlas. The congregation at "Manokin Chapel" replaced their initial church in 1885, and at the same time, the members evidently renamed the congregation, St. John's Methodist Church. Although there is no official record for this alteration in name, the marble datestone in the southwest pier is so inscribed.

Four years later, in May 1889, the congregation was reincorporated under the name of St. James Church of the Methodist Episcopal Church with Littleton Maddox, Isaac Waters, Charles Johnson, Henry Maddox, Joseph Johnson, Southy Wilkins, George Maddox, Joseph Waters, and William Coulbourn cited as trustees under the Reverend Lewis Toulson. A little over a month later, a legal conveyance including the half-acre lot and its improvements was made between the Manokin Chapel of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church and the trustees of the St. James Church of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In July 1889, the St. James congregation acquired another parcel of land from Isaac Atkinson for the purpose of erecting a parsonage.

Finally, around 1900, the congregation decided to erect a new front to their rectangular gable-front church, probably in an effort to keep up with the current fashion in religious architecture that swept Somerset County as well as the nation during the second half of the nineteenth century. In accord with Gothic design popular at the time, asymmetrical towers were built to each side of a tripartite pointed arch, colored glass window. In the process of adding the towers, the former front, double-door entrance and colored glass transom was obscured, and entrance to the church was divided between the two tower doorways. It was probably at this time as well that the balcony was erected to hold an increasing congregation. The church continued in operation until 1964, when it was closed by the Delaware Methodist Conference of which it was a part.

St. James Methodist Episcopal Church stands on the southeast corner of the intersection of Oriole Road (MD 627) and Champ Road near Oriole, Somerset County, Maryland. The single-story frame church faces west with the principal gable oriented on an east/west axis. Accompanying the church is a nineteenth-century graveyard.

Built in two stages this combination frame church is supported by a brick pier foundation, and it is sheathed with a uniform layer of weatherboards. The steeply pitched roofs are covered with asphalt tile shingles. Dated to 1885, the main body of the church was extensively reworked with the addition of the front towers and new windows around the turn of the century.

The west (main) facade is an asymmetrical three-bay elevation with separate double door entrances in the end bays. A small gabled bay spans the distance between the two entrances, and it is lighted by a tripartite window of colored glass. The entrances to each side are flush two-panel doors, and the north door pierces the bell tower. The second level of the tower is marked by a multi-pane colored glass sash, while the third level has long louvered openings on each side. The pyramidal spire has flared eaves and gabled vents define each side. Small corner brackets mark the outside corners under the tower soffit. The two-story south tower is covered by a plain gabled roof, and a multi-pane colored glass sash window lights the second level. Lighting the upper gable of the main block is a small colored glass round window. Fixed in the southwest corner of the two-story tower is a marble datestone inscribed, "St. James M.E. Church." In addition, an earlier date plaque of 1885 is set in the front pier of the main block on the south side.

Each side is three bays deep and lighted by large-sized colored glass windows. Louvered shutters remain on most of the windows, and a narrow brick stove rises from each side. Attached to the east (back) end of the main block is a simple single-story apse.

The interior was not fully inspected, but it was clear that an old exterior double door survives behind the tower entrance on the northwest corner. Now located in a vestibule, the door retains its ogee inset molding that frames the four-panel double door. A four-light transom tops the entrance.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

St. James M.E. Church is a prominent landmark standing along the Oriole Road in the small community of Oriole. Located at an important rural intersection, the church and cemetery are significant sites that distinguish the area. St. James is one of the more elaborate black Methodist churches in Somerset County with its three-story bell tower.
