SM-444
George B. Cecil House
Valley Lee
Private

1887 and earlier

The George B. Cecil House, located at the center of the Valley Lee community, is a highly significant site because of its history as a hub of both commercial and industrial activity. Now a quiet crossroads, Valley Lee was once occupied by two stores, a grist mill, and a voting house. The Cecil House is the only historic structure which marks the intersection of Route 249 and Route 244.

Based on land record research, it appears that the Cecil property may have been occupied by a mill since the late 1700s. By 1887 the parcel which included the mill and mill seat was referred to as "Valley Lee" and was the sole property of Benenia A. Thomas. The property was then improved with a dwelling house, store house, mill and fixtures, mill house, and cottage. In 1889 the property "commonly called 'Mill Seat' but now known as 'Valley Lee'" was sold to William W. Cecil. By 1894, William's son, George B. Cecil, became the sole owner of the property.

From the late 1800s until the mid-twentieth century, George B. Cecil's store stood in a grassy lot in front of the Cecil dwelling house. The store, which carried general merchandise, dry goods and millinery accessories, was also equipped with a bar, a post office and slot machines. It was demolished around 1970. Across Route 244 from the store stood Cecil's grist mill. The mill, located where the Valley Lee post office stands, burned around 1954. All that remains of the mill is the steam engine which has been placed as a monument in front of the post office.

The George B. Cecil House is located on the southwest corner of the intersection of Route 249 and Route 244 in Valley Lee. The house is surrounded by a white picket fence. Between the east elevation of the house and Route 249 is a grassy, open space where the George B. Cecil Store once stood. To the south and west of the house stands a trailer, a garage, a Delco generator house, a formerly detached kitchen, a formerly detached meathouse, two corn cribs, and two barns. On the west side of the house the property slopes dramatically towards a branch of Herring Creek. The house faces east with the roof oriented on a north/south axis.

Built by 1887, the George B. Cecil House is a two-story, frame structure with a brick pier foundation infilled with concrete. The exterior, originally covered with weatherboards, is sheathed with aluminum siding. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles.

The east (main) elevation has an enclosed porch which extends across the full width of the first floor. The porch is pierced by a central entrance door with three-light sidelights. The door is flanked by two pairs of louvered windows on either side. The main block of the house behind the porch is pierced by a central entrance door with a four-light transom and three-light sidelights. Modern windows flank the door. The second floor of the house is lit by three one-over-one sash windows with wide, plain surrounds. The roofline is broken by a central cross gable lit by a round-head, four-light window.

The north elevation of the main block is lit by one one-over-one sash window on both the first and second floors. The eave is finished with cornice returns and lit by a round-head, four-light window. To the west of the main block extends a slightly shorter two-story wing which forms an ell. An enclosed porch extends across the first floor of this wing. The porch enclosure is pierced by a four-light-over-three-panel door and two picture windows. The second floor is lit by two two-over-two sash windows with wide, plain surrounds. A cross gable breaks the center of the roofline and is lit by a round-head, single-light window.

The west elevation of the main block is lit by one one-over-one sash window on the second floor. The enclosed porch of the slightly shorter two-story wing is pierced by a picture window. The gable end of this wing is pierced by one one-over-one sash window on the first floor and one two-over-two sash window on the second floor. The eave is finished with cornice returns and lit by a round-head, four-light window. An exterior cinderblock chimney stands against the wing. A two-story wing extends from this gable end to the south. The first story is obscured by a series of one-story, gable

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The George B. Cecil House, located at the center of the Valley Lee community, is a highly significant site because of its history as a hub of both commercial and industrial activity. Now a quiet crossroads, Valley Lee was once occupied by two stores, a grist mill, and a voting house. The Cecil House is the only historic structure which marks the intersection of Route 249 and Route 244.

Based on land record research, it appears that the Cecil property may have been occupied by a mill since the late 1700s. The first owner may have been John Cole who was assessed for "Johns Woods and Water Mill" located in the St. George's district in the 1793 Tax Assessment. George Cole was assessed for the same between 1794 and 1801. The property then passed to John Shadrick who was assessed for "Chilton's Adventure and half of a Mill," being 9 1/2 acres located in the Poplar Hill district, between 1793 and 1801. Athanasius Fenwick later purchased the mill from Shadrick as well as the "privilege of conveyng the water from the run near Poplar Hill church to said mill land." Between 1806 and 1821, Athanasius Fenwick was assessed for ten acres of mill land and a mill in the St. George's district. His heirs were assessed for the same in 1826.

A deed of 1838 resulted in the sale of Fenwick's mill, referred to as "Cole's Mill and Mill Seat" to Benjamin Hewitt. The following year, Hewitt sold the 10 acre "Mill Land" to William Hebb. From Hebb the property passed to the joint ownership of James B. Thomas and Josiah O. Rooker in 1866.

By 1887 the parcel which included the mill and mill seat was referred to as "Valley Lee" and was the sole property of Benenia A. Thomas. The property was then improved with a dwelling house, store house, mill and fixtures, mill house, and cottage. Thomas transfered the parcel to the partnership of Brown, Graves, and Company. In 1889 the property "commonly called 'Mill Seat' but now known as 'Valley Lee'" was sold to William W. Cecil. Just seven years earlier, William Cecil had purchased the mill property known as "Clifton Factory."

7.1 Description

end additions. The first of these additions houses the furnace and is pierced by a three-light-over-three-panel door on the north side. The second of these is a formerly detached meathouse which is blind on all three sides. Next to the meathouse stands a formerly detached kitchen (see detailed descriptions of the meathouse and kitchen below). The second floor of the two-story wing is lit by two two-over-two sash windows with wide surrounds.

The south elevation of the western wing consists of an enclosed porch which extends across the first floor and ends at a two-story, three-sided bay located at the east end of the house. The porch is pierced by five pairs of louvered windows. Behind the porch, the exterior wall of the house is pierced by a door and a window with wide surrounds which have an interior bead. The second floor is pierced by two two-over-two sash windows with wide, plain surrounds. The three-sided bay is pierced by three one-over-one sash windows on both the first and second floors. The gable end of the main block is pierced by one one-over-one sash window on both the first and second floors. The eave is pierced by a round-head, four-light window and is finished with cornice returns.

The organization of the house interior suggests that the oldest portion of the structure may be the central core of the building, consisting of a dining room and kitchen with an enclosed back stair which provides access to the second floor of the house. Attached to the eastern end of the dining room is a two-story, center hall, single pile plan wing. Two rooms and a stair hall are located on the first and second floors of this wing which appears from the exterior as the main block of the house. None of the original woodwork survives in this section of the house, although the open string stair, with its turned balusters, molded handrail, and blocky newell post, remains intact. A closet underneath the stair shows that the walls of the wing were originally sheathed with plaster and finished with a baseboard. At the head of the stairs and located above the dining room is an assymmetrically shaped bedroom. A plain mantel shelf is located against the west wall of the room. A built-in closet with plain surrounds is located in the northwest corner of the room. Cut nails with machine made heads hold these surrounds in place. The interior surrounds of the bedroom door are molded and finished with bull's eye corner blocks. This bedroom has an exterior two-over-two sash window located on the south wall. A second bedroom located on the west side of this room has an identical built-in closet and a mantel consisting of plain pilasters, a wide freize, and a mantel shelf. A third bedroom, located to the south of this room, retains its original plaster walls and a plain mantel shelf with brackets supports against the south wall. A closet, raised about three feet above the floor, is located in the northwest corner of the room.

Adjacent to the west elevation of the house is a formerly detached kitchen building. The one-and-a-half story kitchen is accessible from the interior of the house by means of a door on the east elevation. This door opens onto the enclosed porch of the dwelling's south elevation. The kitchen is sheathed with a variety of exterior sidings, including the original weatherboard siding on the south side. The foundation of the kitchen, probably wood piers originally, has deteriorated. The structure's sills now rest on the ground. Like the main block of the house, the kitchen roof is oriented on a north/south axis. A six-light window is located just under the roofline of the kitchen on the east elevation. The south and north elevations are blind. The west elevation is pierced by a four-light-over-three-panel door and a window on the first floor. The loft is lit by a smaller window located under the roofline of the building. Both windows are boarded over. An interior brick chimney pierces the roof ridgeline at the south end of the building. Exposed studs and cross braces on the north side of the building are circular sawn and held in place by cut nails. The interior of the kitchen consists of one room with a plywood floor and plaster walls. A stair to the loft, probably not the original, is located in the northwest corner of the kitchen.

Next to the kitchen stands the formerly detached meathouse. The meathouse is sheathed with both aluminum and weatherboard siding. Some of the exposed weatherboards are held in place by cut nails with machine made heads. The meathouse is now accessible from the interior of the house by means of a utility room hyphen. The interior walls of the meathouse are sheathed with wide boards laid diagonally. Metal spikes with square heads, from which meat originally hung, remain imbedded in the ceiling joists.

A small frame structure built to house a Delco generator is located next to the kitchen. This building has a cement pad floor and is sheathed with both aluminum siding and weatherboard. A vertical panel door is located on the east elevation. A window on the west elevation has been boarded up.

A two-car garage located on the south side of the house was constructed in the 1960s.

Two corn cribs located south of the garage were moved here from locations elsewhere on the surrounding farmland. Both are roofed with metal and stand on cinderblock piers. Their vertical board slats are held in place by wire nails.

The outbuilding located farthest from the house is the barn. Sheathed with circular sawn vertical boards and roofed with corrugated metal, the barn also stands on cinderblock piers. The two-story main block of the barn is capped by a gable roof oriented on an east/west axis. Shed roof wings extend from the north, west, and south elevations. Three pairs of doors open on the east side of the barn. The barn is currently used for storage. A modern metal storage shed is located between the barn and the corn cribs.

8.4 Significance

In 1890, William Cecil deeded the 23 acre parcel to his sons John F. and George B. Cecil. In 1894, George B. Cecil purchased John's interest in the property. Today, the house lot remains in the Cecil family.

From the late 1800s until the mid-twentieth century, George B. Cecil's store stood in a grassy lot in front of the Cecil dwelling house. The store, which carried general merchandise, dry goods and millinery accessories, was also equipped with a bar, a post office and slot machines. It was demolished around 1970. Across Route 244 from the store stood Cecil's grist mill. The mill, located where the Valley Lee post office stands, burned around 1954. All that remains of the mill is the steam engine which has been placed as a monument in front of the post office.

It remains unclear when the earliest section of the George B. Cecil House was constructed, although it appears that at least a portion of the house was standing by 1887. According to one family member, the earliest section of the house is the central core which was enlarged over time by the construction of a series of additions. This theory is supported by the plaster and wood work located in the second floor rear bedrooms of the house. The attic of the house revealed circular sawn timbers and some cut nails with machine made heads, but no further information regarding construction periods. The detached kitchen is contemporary with the earliest section of the house and may actually predate it.
