The Drury-Saunders House, located at 22915 Hollywood Road, is sited on a sloping lot at the northwest corner of Point Lookout Road (MD 5) and Hollywood Road (MD 245). Vacant lots are located to the north and west of the property. The dwelling is surrounded by mature trees and shrubs. A circular paved driveway wraps around the dwelling, accessible from Hollywood Road and Point Lookout Road. A garage is located northwest of the dwelling.

The two-and-a-half-story, three-bay Drury-Saunders House was constructed circa 1900 in the Queen Anne style. The ornate building has a T-shaped plan with multiple rear additions constructed in the early twentieth century. Set on an all-stretcher-bond brick foundation, the main block of the wood-frame dwelling is clad in weatherboard siding on the first story and vinyl siding on the second story. The structure has two interior chimneys of brick construction. A cross gable roof covered in asphalt shingles caps the structure. The roof features overhanging eaves, cornice returns, and a vinyl cornice board. The gable ends are clad in fish scale wood shingles. A one-story, three-bay porch located on the façade (southeast elevation) wraps around to the side elevations. The porch is capped by a half-hipped roof covered in standing-seam metal. Turned wood posts with gingerbread brackets support the porch. The porch has been screened-in. The dwelling is fenestrated by 2/2 windows with square-edged wood surrounds and operable louvered shutters. A single-leaf paneled wood entry door with lights is asymmetrically placed on the façade. The door features two-light sidelights and a three-light transom. Rounded arch 2/2 windows are placed in the gable ends.

A two-story, one-bay shed-roofed addition is located on the north (rear) elevation of the main block. The wood-frame addition is set on a concrete foundation and is clad in vinyl siding. The addition is fenestrated by 6/6 vinyl-sash windows with vinyl-clad surrounds. A one-story, one-bay half-hipped addition is located on the northwest (rear) elevation of the main block. Set on a concrete foundation, the wood-frame addition is clad in vinyl siding. The roof is covered in standing-seam metal. The addition is fenestrated by 2/2 windows with vinyl-clad surrounds and operable louvered shutters.

A one-story, five bay garage is located northwest of the dwelling. Based on its form and materials, the garage appears to have been constructed circa 1920. Set on an all-stretcher-bond brick foundation, the wood-frame structure is clad in weatherboard siding. A side-gabled roof with overhanging eaves is covered in asphalt shingles. Four of the five bays of the garage are inset under the roof overhang. The garage is fenestrated by two single-leaf paneled wood doors with lights, two roll-up garage doors, a four-light casement window, and 6/6 windows. All doors and windows have square-edged wood surrounds. Round-arched vents are located in the gable ends.

The Maryland Legislature established Leonardtown as the county seat of St. Mary's County in 1708. Located adjacent to the navigatable Breton Bay, the town grew slowly as an agricultural community and government center. A courthouse was constructed in 1736, followed by a large private residence in the 1760s known as Tudor Hall (SM-10). Despite these two prominent buildings in the formally surveyed town plat, much of the early population of the town was dispersed on the immediate surrounding agricultural landscape. The lack of efficient transportation in and around Leonardtown resulted in the community remaining rural and small. In the early nineteenth century, paddlewheel steamboats began operating out of Leonardtown (Loker, 2001). Leonardtown became the first town in St. Mary's County to become incorporated in 1858.

The period following the Civil War experienced considerable growth in Leonardtown. In 1870, the town included "a courthouse, a jail, two churches, seven stores, two hotels, two oyster houses, three blacksmith shops, one harness shop, two bakeries, and 43 residences," with a population of almost 400 (Loker, 2001). Late nineteenth and early twentieth century mapping provides a clear picture of the town layout. The USGS 1892 quadrangle shows development concentrated along the north-south road that is today's Main Street. The large tobacco plantations of the county dispersed along with the former slave labor population. Some local farmers shifted their focus on smaller crops of fruits, vegetables and wheat, while others turned to oystering and fishing from the nearby bay. In 1885, the wharf at Breton Bay was incorporated, generating maritime business opportunities from steamboats, while igniting the local economy of Leonardtown. By the early twentieth century, steamships and horse-drawn carriages remained the most effective transportation option for local residents (Loker, 2001). Train service bypassed the town, and the first major road to access the town was not constructed until 1910. By 1914, town residents could finally travel efficiently to Washington, D.C. by road (Loker, 2001).

At the turn of the 20th century, the town was experiencing a period of cohesiveness with a rapidly developing downtown and community focus. Businesses catered to the new automobile industry, manufacturing facilities were established, electrical and telephone utilities were installed, and roadways were improved, further facilitating commerce. Residential structures were constructed on or near Main Street (Washington Street). A new courthouse was constructed to replace the original one that had since burned down. The construction of several commercial structures along Washington Street in Leonardtown reflects this period of growth in the early to mid-20th century and the transition from a rural agricultural town to a prosperous commercial and governmental center. The continued pattern of development along Washington Street is reflected on the USGS (1901) quadrangle map, and by 1939, the USGS map shows that development in and around the town had expanded considerably.

The twentieth century also brought some significant changes to Leonardtown and the area. The population began to flux, and agricultural land was being developed into residential housing, displacing tenant farmers (Loker, 2001). The population of the county doubled in the late 1940s because of the establishment of the U.S. Naval Air Station, located only twelve miles from Leonardtown on the Patuxent River. World War II veterans returned from the war seeking employment at the air station and low-cost housing. Leonardtown saw a significant boost in residential development as a result of this increased demand for housing (Loker, 2001). The population influx and increased construction furthered the transformation of Leonardtown in the twentieth century from an agricultural village to the governmental, business and residential center that it is today.

The earliest extant buildings in Leonardtown date to the mid-eighteenth century, with the majority of buildings dating from the later nineteenth to the mid-twentieth centuries. These buildings reflect the agricultural, governmental and commercial history of the area and illustrate a variety of styles, including Queen Anne, Italianate, Second Empire, Colonial Revival, Craftsman, and a variety of vernacular interpretations each. Similar to the Drury-Saunders House, the W.W. Sawyer House (SM-365) and the Ford/Sterling House (SM-343) utilized elements of the popular Queen Anne style, such as asymmetrical massing and decorative mill work (Ranzetta, SM-592, 1997).

The Drury-Saunders House was constructed circa 1900 for Joseph Benedict and Mary L. Drury. The dwelling is sited on a portion of a 60-acre tract of land known as "Brooklyn" and "The Race Track."(1) In the early twentieth century, Joseph B. Drury also constructed a general store on the property. The wood-frame general store had a wide front porch, and was opened in June of 1903. The store carried all types of items from shoes to fishing rods. In 1924, the property, now only 2.2 acres in size, was sold to Joseph A. and Mary Helen Saunders.(2) Joseph A. Saunders was a former St. Mary's County Treasurer and the president of the County Trust Company in Leonardtown. The Saunders continued to operate Drury's general store, which became known as "Saunders' Corner." The store continued operation until 1968 when it was demolished for the widening of Point Lookout Road (MD 5).(3)

The Drury-Saunders House is an architectural expressing of the significant developmental changes Leonardtown underwent during the turn of the twentieth century. Popular architectural styles began appearing in larger numbers during this time, replacing vernacular farmhouses dispersed on the landscape. The introduction of mills and skilled contractors capitalizing on the population increase resulted in more stylistic residential housing stock. Also, as large farms on the periphery of town subdivided into smaller parcels and tenant farming operations following the Civil War, the population gravitated inward towards the town center on smaller lots as citizens shifted focus from large farming practices to other businesses. The location of the Drury-Saunders House at a crossroads and just north of downtown places the building at a prominent location, and ideal for the family store that once operated on "Saunders' Corner."

The Drury-Saunders House at 22915 Hollywood Road was constructed circa 1900, during a period of development and a shift away from large plantations to smaller farms, residential structures clustered on Main Street, family businesses and new industries in Leonardtown. The location of the house at a crossroads near Main Street and the association of the house with a family-operated general store contributes to the understanding of development of Leonardtown. This property is considered individually associated with the events and trends that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of Leonardtown's history, thus qualifying it for eligibility under Criterion A. The property is not associated with any person or group of persons of outstanding importance to the community, state, or nation. Therefore, the Drury-Saunders House is not eligible under Criterion B. The building embodies distinctive characteristics of early twentieth-century residential architecture, and is an excellent example of Queen Anne style architecture in St. Mary's County. The house is a good example of the various popular styles constructed in Leonardtown, marking a time when architectural aesthetics were no longer primarily utilized in civic architecture or for the wealthy population, but became a preference and more affordable to the residential community. It is thus eligible under Criterion C. The Drury-Saunders House was not evaluated under Criterion D. Therefore, it has been recommended that the Drury-Saunders House is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criteria A and C.

Capsule Summary
SM-540
Drury/Saunders House
Leonardtown
Private

c. 1900

Situated at the northwest corner of Jefferson and Washington Streets in Leonardtown, the Drury/Saunders house represents a significant Queen-Anne style dwelling. The two-story building, constructed c. 1900s, is located at a commercially strategic position and was once associated with a corner store. While the store was demolished during the widening of Jefferson Street (Route 5), the Drury/Saunders house remains to illustrate the diversity of housing plans and styles open to Leonardtown residents during the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century. Today, the building represents the first of several late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century dwellings that line the northern part of Washington Street.

Initially part of a large 60 acre tract called "Brooklyn" and "The Race Track," the Drury/Saunders house was constructed by Joseph Benedict and Mary L. Drury c. 1900. Drury, who also operated a corner store next door, sold the house to its present owners Joseph A. and Mary Helen Saunders in 1924. By this time the parcel had shrunk to its present size of 2.2 acres.

The Drury/Saunders House is located at the intersection of Route 245 (Washington Street) and Route 5 (Jefferson Avenue) on the northwest corner in Leonardtown. While bounded on the east and south by busy roads, the dwelling is also situated beside vacant lots to the west and north. The house is setback 30' from the road and lies on a flat, grassy lot. The residence represents the first of a series of late-nineteenth to early-twentieth century dwellings that line the northern section of Washington Street.

The Parsons/Drury/Saunders house is a frame, two story, three-bay, Queen-Anne style dwelling with a common bond brick foundation, and gable roof. Constructed c. 1900, the building is oriented on a east/west axis with its primary (east) elevation facing Washington Street. The three bays on the first floor are shaded by a wrap-around, screened-in porch supported on brick piers and decorated with turned posts and scroll sawn brackets. This elevation features a gable front sided with clapboard on the first two floors but with fishscale siding on the attic story. The transition between these two elements is signaled through the use of cornice returns. The attic story is also adorned by a two-over-two window with a semicircular crown. The gable roof is sheathed with asphalt shingles and pierced by two, brick chimney flues. Most of the windows are two-over-two, double-hung sash windows.
