St. Aloysius R. C. Church Cemetery

Leonardtown

Public

c. 1766-1996

From 1766-present (1996) the St. Aloysius Roman Catholic Church Cemetery has served as a burial ground for St. Aloysius Parish in Leonardtown. The land for the church and cemetery was donated to St. Aloysius Parish by Ann Thompson in 1766. A frame church, no longer visible, was constructed soon after. The church remained active until 1847 when the congregation constructed a new house of worship in Leonardtown.

While remains of the church are no longer visible, the cemetery has served as the final resting place for many Catholic families and individuals from the area from the 1760s to the present. The cemetery includes headstones from the Wathen, Duke, Camalier, Simms, Fenwick, King, Spalding, Swales, Conner, Cooper, Young and several other local families. These headstones and family plots exhibit a significantly wide variety of iconography, craftsmanship, and materials. They range from finely shaped and finished stone to unmarked wooden crosses. This contrast in quality and age of the headstones encapsulates over 200 years of funerary practice in St. Mary's County.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The St. Aloysius Roman Catholic Cemetery is located approximately 0.5 miles northwest of the intersection of Route 245 and Old Cemetery Road on Old Cemetery Road just outside the corporate limits of Leonardtown. The cemetery is located on a 4.62 acre tract that is situated on a low ridge that gently slopes to the east. The plot is surrounded on three sides by woods and on the other by a road. The grass in the cemetery is cut and there are several cedar as well as deciduous trees located within its boundaries. A dirt tract runs roughly north to south thereby bisecting the cemetery.

Most headstones are aligned on an east/west axis and exhibit Catholic iconography such as "IHS" or crosses as well as other symbols such as urns and willow trees. The stones are not necessarily grouped together in an orderly fashion. The headstones date from 1787 to the present with a majority of the visible headstones dating from the mid-nineteenth to the mid-twentieth centuries.

The eighteenth century markers tend to be roughly cut stone with inscriptions on only one side--suggesting that these markers may have been laid flat rather than perpendicular to the ground. They usually contain the initials of the deceased, the year and/or month of death, and sometimes a prominent roughly shaped crucifix through the middle of the stone. Only three such stones were found during the site visit.

The cemetery is also distinguished by several family plots, a slightly raised table tomb, several military markers, as well as three unmarked wood crosses. The most extravagant family plot is that of Benedict Spalding dated 1854. This plot is surrounded by a cast iron fence that is decorated with torches, acorns, urns, crossed arrows, and other intricate but replicated details.

Military markers in the cemetery tend to date from the twentieth century. These polished markers are notably austere. They tend to contain a cross, the name of the deceased, the rank, unit, and conflict they were involved with, and finally their date of birth and death. The visible military markers only recognize veterans of World War I and World War II.

It should be noted that a great majority of the graves in this cemetery are probably not marked. Charlie Fenwick, a local historian, noted that during a recent burial within the cemetery old graves were uncovered--adding credence to the predominance of unmarked burials. He also noted that a significantly large slave cemetery was once located immediately to the west of the current cemetery and across the dirt road. These graves were usually marked with wooden crosses.

The site or foundation of the eighteenth century church could not be located during the site visit.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

From 1766-present (1996) the St. Aloysius Roman Catholic Church Cemetery has served as a burial ground for St. Aloysius Parish in Leonardtown. The land for the church and cemetery was donated to St. Aloysius Parish by Ann Thompson in 1766. A frame church, no longer visible, was constructed soon after. The church remained active until 1847 when the congregation constructed a new house of worship in Leonardtown.

While remains of the church are no longer visible, the cemetery has served as the final resting place for many Catholic families and individuals from the area from the 1780s to the present. The cemetery includes headstones from the Wathen, Duke, Camalier, Simms, Fenwick, King, Spalding, Swales, Conner, Cooper, and Young families. These headstones and family plots exhibit a significantly wide variety of iconography, craftsmanship, and materials. They range from finely shaped and finished stone to unmarked wooden crosses.

While perhaps not representative of all eighteenth century gravestones that once existed, the cemetery's three visible eighteenth century stones reveal much about life in the county during this timeperiod. The stones are typically small, roughly shaped, contain the initials of the deceased, a cross, and the year of their passing. These markers represent the crudest of memorials--simultaneously reflecting the relative lack of stone in the area and the dirth of craftsmen to elaborately shape and carve it.

Early and mid-nineteenth century markers reveal a much different reality. The Benedict Spalding family plot is the most prominent and decorated in the entire cemetery. Dating from 1854, the plot is surrounded by a cast iron fence that is ornamented with acorns, urns, roses, arrows, and other angular shapes. In contrast, the Cooper family plot contains a much more modest and austere cast iron fence dating from the late-nineteenth century. While different, these two family plots reflect regional trends in funerary art and practice--thus confirming St. Mary's County's connections to not only surrounding counties but also to the nation as well.

Finally, the cemetery contains a wide variety of modern headstones. Most notable are the military markers of veterens who served in World War I and II.
