DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Trax House began life as a one and one-half story two room dwelling in the early 19th century. At each gable was a chimney probably built on the outside of the building. There were two dormers on each side of the 'A' roof and possibly a central door below with two flanking windows.

To this simple vernacular dwelling was added a two bay long two story addition at each end of the house, with the roof ridge running perpendicular to the old part. These additions were probably added in the early 20th century and the entire structure was covered with brown wood shingle. The original form of the house is still discernible in the center of the complex.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

John Trax house is included in this survey of historic buildings because the center of the building is the shell of an early 19th century vernacular farm house. It now contains an interesting 'H' plan and is the product of early 20th century remodeling.
