DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

White Marsh Tract is located at the headwaters of Kings Creek in Talbot County. When the inventory of sites was undertaken in 1969, an early dwelling existed on the property composed of a one and one-half story frame dwelling probably built in the second quarter of the 19th century, with a mid-century main part built on its west side and a later section on the east. It was a relatively modest 19th century farmhouse which resembled the Holland House near Bethlehem, Caroline County.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This is the site of human habitation since at least the early 19th century. Its dwelling was a simple combination of vernacular and Italianate structures and prior to its being burned, was still in fair condition.
