

Bata Shoe Store
14 North Washington Street
Easton, Maryland 21601

T-37
Nineteenth Century,
First Quarter

Although greatly altered and currently in only fair condition, 14 North Washington Street exemplifies a late Federal row building, taller and bolder than similiar structures built earlier. Its Flemish bond facade is complimented by a delicate pierced-work wooden cornice probably added about the middle of the nineteenth century.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This structure stands on the east side of Washington Street across from the Talbot County Court House; it faces west. Magazine Alley runs along its north wall and it is adjacent to the Shannahan-Wrightson Building (T-40).

The building is brick, three bays wide and two-and-a-half stories in height. Its gable roof is taller and somewhat more steeply pitched than the other Federal period buildings on Washington Street. There are two gable dormers on the western slope of the roof; those at the rear of the building have been removed. Three additions form an ell to the rear. They have no distinguishing architectural features and appear to date from the mid-nineteenth century and twentieth century. There are two chimneys at the ridge of the roof. The one at the south wall, a double chimney with a corbelled cap, appears to be original; that at the north wall is modern.

The building has suffered substantial alterations; a large-scale store front has replaced its entire first floor. A portion of the Flemish bond brick facade remains, however, as do the windows with flat arches and eight over twelve sashes. The trim is a single one inch half round molding. The tall gable dormers have gently pitched roofs and round-headed windows with nine over six sashes. The window opening is flanked by fluted pilasters; there is a cornice and return. Despite needed repairs these features retain their original appearance. The roof is covered with raised seam metal painted green.

Probably added in a mid-nineteenth century renovation, the cornice is the building's most notable feature. The small console-type brackets alternate with stylized pierced-work festoons at the corona. Larger double console brackets with leaf-like feet are found at the corners of the building. A line of tiny half-globes and moldings decorates the frieze. Although added later, the cornice is well-scaled to the building and represents an interesting combination of periods of building. The original cornice remains on the rear facade; it is boxy and plain with original crown and bed moldings.

Inside all original details have disappeared from the first floor, which is now used as a shoe store. Upstairs, the early stair is gone, but examples of the original window and door trim remain as does the trim from the mid-nineteenth century renovation. Delicate Federal chair rails of composite moldings may be seen on the upper floor. The barrel vault dormers retain beaded plaster stops. Early yellow pine floors exist on both upper floors. On the second floor broad deeply molded door and window trim is used in the two main rooms. These rooms, located on the north side of the building are large with rather high ceilings. The hall way located at the southern portion of the building would indicate that, typical of Easton's Federal period buildings, the stair and main entrance were also at this side. A storage area, the upper floor of this structure are in serious need of repair.

 This structure is a rowhouse, Federal in style, and probably built well into the nineteenth century. It has suffered extensive restoration and alterations. It is three bays wide. The first storey is now occupied by a storefront whose design is very insympathetic with the character of the rest of the building. The second storey has three 8/12 windows with flat brick arches. There are two 9/6 round-arched dormers on the roof whose windows have been replaced with modern sashes. There is an enclosed chimney at each end of the building.   An elaborate cornice with heavy carved brackets runs along the front of the roofline. This elaborate cornice dates the building as a late example of Federal design. It is similar to one on a building on Dover St. which is dated 1868. Although not outstanding, if treated properly this structure could add much to downtown Easton. - The Federal character of the building should be accentuated rather than denied.
