STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

The Faulkner Farmhouse is important because it is a good example of the additive principal of vernacular buildings. Moreover, in its original appearance it had a form more commonly associated with the Eastern Shore of Virginia, with two separate structures joined by a smaller third section. In its early 19th century appearance, it was more like the houses of southern Maryland. It is also of importance because of the existence of a small original smokehouse.
