Alfred H. Hambleton House
St. Michaels
private

The Alfred H. Hambleton house is a distinctive variation of the standard third quarter of the nineteenth-century house of St. Michaels. Following a modified side hall/double-pile plan, the common bond brick house is finished with a mixture of standard and unconventional mid to late nineteenth-century woodwork. The sawn baluster handrails on the second floor and in the attic are especially noteworthy as is the board-and-batten closet partition in the second floor hall. Overall, the interiors have not been altered to any great degree, and aside from the loss of the two-story porch, the exterior has remained largely intact as well.

Only a few families have owned this North Talbot Street property since the brick house was erected around 1873. In that year, Alfred H. Hambleton purchased the lot from William and Priscilla Cooper, Joseph H. and Charlotte C. White, and H. Clay and Martha H. Dodson for $100, and during the same year mortgaged the property with the Workingman's Building and Loan Association of St. Michaels for $600. It is presumed Hambleton used the $600 to erect his two-story brick house. Alfred and his wife, Margaret, occupied the house until Alfred's death in February of 1914. After Margaret's purchase of the property at a court appointed sale in 1916, she immediately sold the house to James C. Mulliken. More recently the property was owned by R. Eugene and Margaret Rude, who bought the house in 1945 and sold it in 1981.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Alfred H. Hambleton house stands on the west side of North Talbot Street at the northern end of St. Michaels, Talbot County, Maryland. The two-story, three-bay brick house faces east with its principal gable oriented on a north/south axis.

Built around 1873, the two-story, side hall-double pile brick house is supported by an unexcavated brick foundation and covered by a medium pitched asphalt shingle roof. The eaves are extended and the soffits are sloped. Attached to the back (west) is a single-story, one-room plan kitchen wing. The brick walls are consistently laid in seven-course common bond.

The east (main) elevation is a three-bay facade with a entrance marking the south bay. A heavily molded four-panel door is topped by two-light transom. Flanking the two adjacent bays are two-over-two sash windows flanked with louvered shutters. Each opening is distinguished by a jack arch. The second floor is pierced by three openings. A center, closed-over door is flanked by two-over-two sash windows. A two-story chamfered post porch with sawn balusters formerly covered the entire front of this house, and four soldier bricks fill the holes where the second floor joints were once tied into the house. A late nineteenth-century photograph documents the exact appearance of the house with the porch.

The north (side) elevation is marked by an asymmetrical fenestration with a pair of two-over-two sash windows lighting the first and second floors. Jack arches top the four windows. A smaller two-over-two window with a wooden lintel lights the attic between the pair of brick chimneys that protrude the roof. The brick stacks are finished with corbelled caps.

The west (back) wall of the house is partially covered by the single-story one-room kitchen wing. The brick kitchen is lighted by six-over-six sash windows on the north and south walls, and a partially glazed door pierces the west wall to the south of the interior end brick stove stack. Like the house, the windows are flanked by louvered shutters. South of the kitchen, a four-panel door provides access to the back of the main block. A two-over-two sash window lights the second floor.

The south gable end is marked by single two-over-two windows on each floor. Like the north end, brick jack arches mark the first and second floor windows and a wooden lintel tops the attic light.

The first and second floor interiors have been slightly modified, but a large percentage of the original, and at the same time, unconventional woodwork remains in place. The front room is distinguished by a period stair which rises against the south wall and a plain post-and-lintel mantel which accents the hearth. The stair has a turned newel post, turned balusters, a plain stringer, and an oval-profile handrail.

Separating the two rooms is a partition with a large door opening. The rear room is fitted with the same nineteenth-century style mantel, and a two-panel door opens into the stair closet in the southwest corner of the room. The kitchen is finished in an ordinary manner without noteworthy detail.

The second room is divided into three rooms that open off a small hall. At the top of the stair a railing of decorative sawn balusters stretches between the attic stair partition and a square newel post. Fitted into the west end of the second floor hall is an unusual closet with a board-and-battened partition and a four-panel door. Four-panel doors open also into the three bedrooms which are finished plain baseboards. A simple mantel shelf is located in the back bedroom. The attic stair, aside from two steps exposed in the hall, is enclosed behind a two-panel door and a beaded board partition. A cast iron latch and drop-pintels survive on the attic door.

The attic is finished as well with plaster walls. Like the second floor, an unconventional sawn baluster handrail is located at the head of the stair. The baluster profile follows a different pattern from that found on the second floor or in the documentary photograph of the house. Knee walls on the east and west sides of the attic room are pierced by board doors framed by molded trim.

SIGNIFICANCE

The Alfred H. Hambleton house is a distinctive variation in the standard third quarter of the nineteenth century house of St. Michaels. Following a modified side hall-double pile plan, the common bond brick house is finished inside with a mixture of standard and unconventional mid to late nineteenth-century woodwork. The sawn baluster handrails on the second floor and in the attic are especially noteworthy as is the board-and-batten closet partition in the second floor hall. Overall, the interior have not been altered to any great degree, and aside from the loss of the -story porch, the exterior has remained largely intact as well. Efforts should be made to retain as much of the original interior woodwork as possible when this house faces remodeling.

HISTORY AND SUPPORT

Only a few families have owned this property since the brick house was erected around 1873. In that year, Alfred H. Hambleton purchased the lot from William and Priscilla Cooper, Joseph H. and Charlotte C. White and H. Clay and Martha H. Dodson for $100 (79/328), and during the same year mortgaged the property with the Workingman's Building & Loan Association of St. Michaels for $600.(79/423) It is presumed Hambleton used the $600 to erect his two-story brick house. Alfred and his wife, Margaret, occupied the house until Alfred's death in February of 1914. After Margaret's purchase of the property at a court appointed sale in 1916 (174/452), she immediately sold the house to James C. Mulliken (174/453). More recently, the property was owned by R. Eugene and Margaret R. Rude, who bought the house in 1945 (262/54), and sold it in 1981 (553/67).
