John H. Blades House
St. Michaels
private

c. 1868

The research assembled for this East Chestnut Street lot suggests the house was erected during the ownership of John H. Blades, who acquired the property in 1868. Blades' heirs sold the house in 1908 to Edward S. Harper for $700, a transfer price that at the time would have included the value of a house this size. The mid nineteenth-century features of this side hall/parlor dwelling, and its location on the 1877 St. Michaels town map further support the estimated date. The house stands in a row of well preserved mid to late nineteenth-century frame dwellings and contributes to the period character of East Chestnut Street.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Historically known as the John H. Blades house, this two-story side hall/parlor frame house stands at 112 East Chestnut Street in the town of St. Michaels, Talbot County, Maryland. The two-story frame house faces north with the gable roof oriented on an east/west axis.

Built around 1870, the two-story, two-part frame house is supported by a minimal brick foundation, and it is sheathed with a combination of plain weatherboards and artificial siding. The medium pitched gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Standing behind the house are single story frame storage or utility buildings.

The north (main) facade is an asymmetrical two-bay elevation with a side entrance and flanking six-over-six sash window. The four-panel front door is framed by a four-light transom and three-light sidelights. The adjacent window is flanked by louvered shutters. Stretching across the front of the house is a square post, shed roofed porch with sawn brackets and sawn balusters.

The second floor is pierced by two unevenly spaced six-over-six sash windows flanked by louvered shutters as well. Trimming the cornice is a series of widely spaced brackets.

The west gable end is a plain weatherboard wall with slightly extended eaves. An interior end brick stack protrudes through the gable end. The east end is largely covered by the slightly shorter two-story, two-bay service wing that is lighted by six-over-six sash windows on each floor. Aside from an exterior brick stack that has been added to the gable end, the exterior details are similar to the main block. To the south a shed roof addition encloses a modern kitchen.

The south side of the main house is defined by a two-bay elevation as well with a side rear entrance and flanking six-over-six sash window. The rear door is topped by a three-light transom and sheltered by a shed roof hood.

The interior has been remodeled somewhat through the past twenty years. The stair, although altered, remains in the same location, and four-panel doors open into the various first and second floor rooms. A mid nineteenth-century post-and-lintel style mantel survives in the eastern two-story wing that is now used as the dining room.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The John H. Blades house stands in a well preserved row of mid to late nineteenth-century frame dwellings on East Chestnut Street. The two-story side hall parlor frame dwelling extends eastward by a slightly shorter two-story two-bay wing. Both sections appear to date from the same period and are finished with like materials. The house survives largely intact with many mid nineteenth-century finishes undisturbed. The house contributes to the distinctive period character of East Chestnut Street.

NOTES Begins at the NEcorner of Thomas Blades of Levin; run South 125 feet to Dr. John Miller; East 60 feet to Annie E. Blades; then North 125 feet to Chestnut Street; with the street West 60 feet to the beginning.

The "others" were: Julia A. Gardiner, Mary E. Blades, Louisa Blades, Aquila H. Greenfield, and Laura V. Greenfield. They were the heirs of Levin Blades, son of Levin Blades, Sr.

Levin Blades, Sr. died in 1840 and his real estate was divided by an agreement between his children finalised in 1841, 55/510. Under this agreement, Levin Blades was awarded "the house, lot, and premises where he now resides and also the sum of thirty dollars." The fact that Levin's heirs sell this house and lot is used as the basis for assuming that lot 67 (with a house) was that which was awarded to Levin Blades in 55/510.

No deed for the property to Levin Blades, Sr. was found. He probably acquired it from John Dorgin, Sr. before Dorgin's death about 1830.

The land was part of "Jane's Progress" which Dorgin obtained as a result of a suit in Chancery Court (1812, 36/291 and 1813, 36/288.
