Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The George Taylor house is located on Fairbank Road in the village of Fairbanks on Tilghman Island, Talbot County, Maryland. The house faces north with the principal gable oriented on an east/west axis.

Built around the turn of the twentieth century, this two-story house is clad in yellow asbestos shingles and covered by an asphalt shingle roof. It is supported by a brick pier foundation.

The four bay house has two doors as the central bays, and two-over-two sash windows as the two outer bays. A screened in porch stretches across the full width of the first floor. Two original turned porch supports are flush against the exterior wall of the house. The windows have plain, wide surrounds, and the extended eaves return onto the east and west elevations. The second floor has four two-over-two sash windows.

The only windows on the east and west elevations are two small two-over-two sash windows at the attic story. An interior brick chimney stands above each gable end.

The south elevation has an enclosed breezeway leading to a one story, gable roofed summer kitchen with an interior chimney at the south gable end. According to the present owners, the summer kitchen was formerly used as a one horse stable separate from the main house, and originally had a board and batten exterior. A screened porch shed addition is connected to the southern end of the summer kitchen. Two two-over-two sash windows light the first floor of the south elevation to the west of the summer kitchen. Four two-over-two sash windows light the second story.

The interior was not seen.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

According to the present owners, George Taylor built this house which later belonged to the Kinnamon family, the Lomax family, and then to Clarence Harrison. Although the front facade has two doors, the house was never used as a two family home. This house is the only Fairbank home with such a double door design.

The George Taylor house is one of a collection of late 19th century, two-story, frame houses which make up the housing stock of Fairbank.
