

ABSTRACT
(R. Andrews, 1-77)

16-22 East Lee Street
Hagerstown
Washington County, Maryland

circa 1894

This group of five Picturesque row houses is an important example of late nineteenth century lower middle class domestic architecture in Hagerstown. Erected about 1894, the frame building is primarily significant for its facade, an eclectic design of bay windows, colored glass, scroll brackets, and scalloped skirt boards. Few other local examples of this class of housing exhibit the degree of aestheticism evident in this row. Nearly original in condition, the facade (south elevation) is the most prominent visual element in this block of East Lee Street.

The row was erected during a period of economic prosperity and industrial expansion. It was built as an investment for George B. McClellan Wolf (18 -1931), a Hagerstown contractor who purchased the property in 1893 and retained title to it at the time of his death. Among the occupations listed in the city directories for the early residents of this row are machinist, mechanic, printer, knitter, and stone cutter.

By 1889 Hagerstown had emerged as the second manufacturing city in Maryland in terms of value of products. The city supported a variety of industries, the most important being machine shops, railroad repair shops, flour and grist mills, and the manufacture of furniture, knit goods, and organs. The population more than doubled over the turn of the century, from 6,627 in 1880 to 16,507 in 1910, creating a demand for more housing and denser land occupation.

The property is identified in the deeds as Lot No. 9 in Heisters' Addition to Hagerstown. It was acquired by the present owners in 1975.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Known as 16-22 East Lee Street in Hagerstown, Washington County, this group of row houses is located approximately three blocks south of Public Square and stands on the north side of the street near the center of the block formed by South Potomac and South Locust Streets. Included within this row are numbers 16, 16 1/2, 18, 20 and 22 East Lee Street.

The building, built about 1894, is a 2 1/2 story rectangular frame structure with a shed roof divided into five dwelling units. Abutting the sidewalk, the building rests on a brick and stone foundation and has two inner open passageways leading from the street to the rear elevations. Typical of urban architecture, the decorative detailing is limited primarily to the facade. The building appears to be structurally sound and sheathed with clapboards.

Nearly original in condition, the facade or south elevation is divided into five units arranged in three sections corresponding to the open passageways through the interior. The west and middle sections consist of two mirror image units each. The east section has only one facade unit and is the one element which breaks the symmetry and rhythm created by the other sections. This end section was probably added to the original design not for aesthetic reasons but to fill the lot with rentable space. The facade is held together as a whole by a low but sharply pitched mansard roof with a bracketed cornice.

Each facade unit consists of a hooded single doorway and a two-story tripartite bay window crowned with a high gable roof. The first story of the bay window is half of a hexagon with a window in each of the equal size parts. The bay window above is rectangular with two double front windows and blank sidewalls. The second story bay window is not as the first story bay window. A small, square window is located on the second story above the hooded doorway.

The doorways have single doors, rectangular transoms and broad, flat surrounds with chamfering and strips of reeding. The transoms have ten square lights each and are flanked by single scroll brackets which support the hoods and terminate with ornamental pendants. The doors are wooden and have two rectangular molded raised panels in the lower portion and a multilight window above. The entranceways are reached by frame stoops with dado-like balustrades.

The hoods over the doorways are actually a part of the pent roof which stretches across the facade above the first story, capping the lower bay windows and protecting the entranceways. The hood-image is fostered by the supporting scroll brackets below and pediments echoing the dormer gables above.

The principal windows of the facade have double-hung, wooden sashes with nine-over-one lights. The nine-light top sash has a large central rectangular light with narrow colored lights bordering on the sides and square lights in the corners. This same arrangement is repeated in the door windows except for the easternmost door in which the original window has been replaced by a solid light.

The rhythmic quality of facade is created through a combination of shapes and decorative detailing. The scalloped skirt boards of the second story windows add movement to the rhythm set by the placement of the bay windows and doorways. The angularity of the bay window gables which gives height to the facade is repeated in the door hoods and the entablatures of the square windows on the second floor. The quality is further enhanced by the scroll brackets, incised decoration in the pediments above the door hoods, bands, reedings, ornamental pendants and the half-timbering effect in the bay window gables.

The chimneys are constructed of brick and are situated toward the back of the building. Those readily visible from the street appear to be original.

The mansard roof along the street appears to be sheathed with dark slate shingles with a decorative band of three rows laid in an imbricated pattern.

The east side which is readily visible from the street because of an alley, has three windows on the first floor and two on the upper story. These windows have double-hung wooden sashes with two-over-two lights and are framed with post and lintel-type trim with bands of reeding decoration.
