Parsonage, John Wesley United Methodist Church
131 North Potomac Street
Hagerstown
Washington County, Maryland

early 20th century

The Parsonage of the Wesley United Methodist Church was erected in the early twentieth century when the church was known as Saint Paul's Methodist Church. The house is said to have been erected during the pastorate of Dr. V. N. Ridgely, 1928-1933, and is believed to have been a part of the construction program which also saw the completion of the front towers on the church building to the south. Total cost of the building projects is listed as somewhat over $28,000.

Built on a high foundation, the house is built of rock-faced ashlar (probably limestone) similar to that used on the church structure (1884-1892). The house is asymmetrical in design with a large one story porch on the facade (east elevation). Stylistically, the building is quite plain although Gothic influence is evident in the facade roof gable with two pointed arch windows.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Wesley Methodist Church Parsonage is located at 131 North Potomac Street in Hagerstown, Washington County, and stands on the west side of the street near the middle of the block formed by Franklin and Church Streets, the second block north of Public Square.

Built on a high foundation, the Parsonage is an early twentieth century, stone house which is two and a half stories high with a large, one story porch on the facade or east elevation. The exterior walls are constructed of rock-faced ashlar (probably limestone) similar to that used in the church building to the south. The house appears to be structurally sound. The exterior is in original condition.

The facade or east elevation has a slightly off center doorway on the first floor with a group of three single windows to the south and a single one to the north. The second story also has three single windows (above those on the lower story) and two in the northern section. The south half of the roof has a parapeted gable with two pointed arch windows. The northern half of the roof has a rectangular window dormer with a gable roof.

A three part bay window projects from the south elevation near the west end. The north wall has a parapeted gable.

The structure is free-standing and sits back from the general building line of North Potomac Street.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Parsonage of the Wesley United Methodist Church was erected in the early twentieth century when the church was known as Saint Paul's Methodist Church. The house is said to have been erected during the pastorate of Dr. V. N. Ridgely, 1928-1933, and is believed to have been a part of the construction program which also saw the completion of the front towers on the church building to the south. Total cost of the building projects is listed as somewhat over $28,000 (Church files).

Built on a high foundation, the house is built of rock-faced ashlar (probably limestone) similar to that used on the church structure (1884-1892). The house is asymmetrical in design with a large one story porch on the facade (east elevation). Stylistically, the building is quite plain although Gothic influence is evident in the facade roof gable with two pointed arch windows.

The construction date given in the Church office notes is somewhat questionable. The house has a general feel of dating earlier than 1928, more likely about 1910. Also, there is no evidence that the Church was issued a building permit during the 1928-1933 period for any construction.

Set back from the general building line of North Potomac Street, the Parsonage is different in design and construction from the surround, earlier buildings.

NOTE: The parents of this surveyor were married in this building on 23 January 1943.
