Description

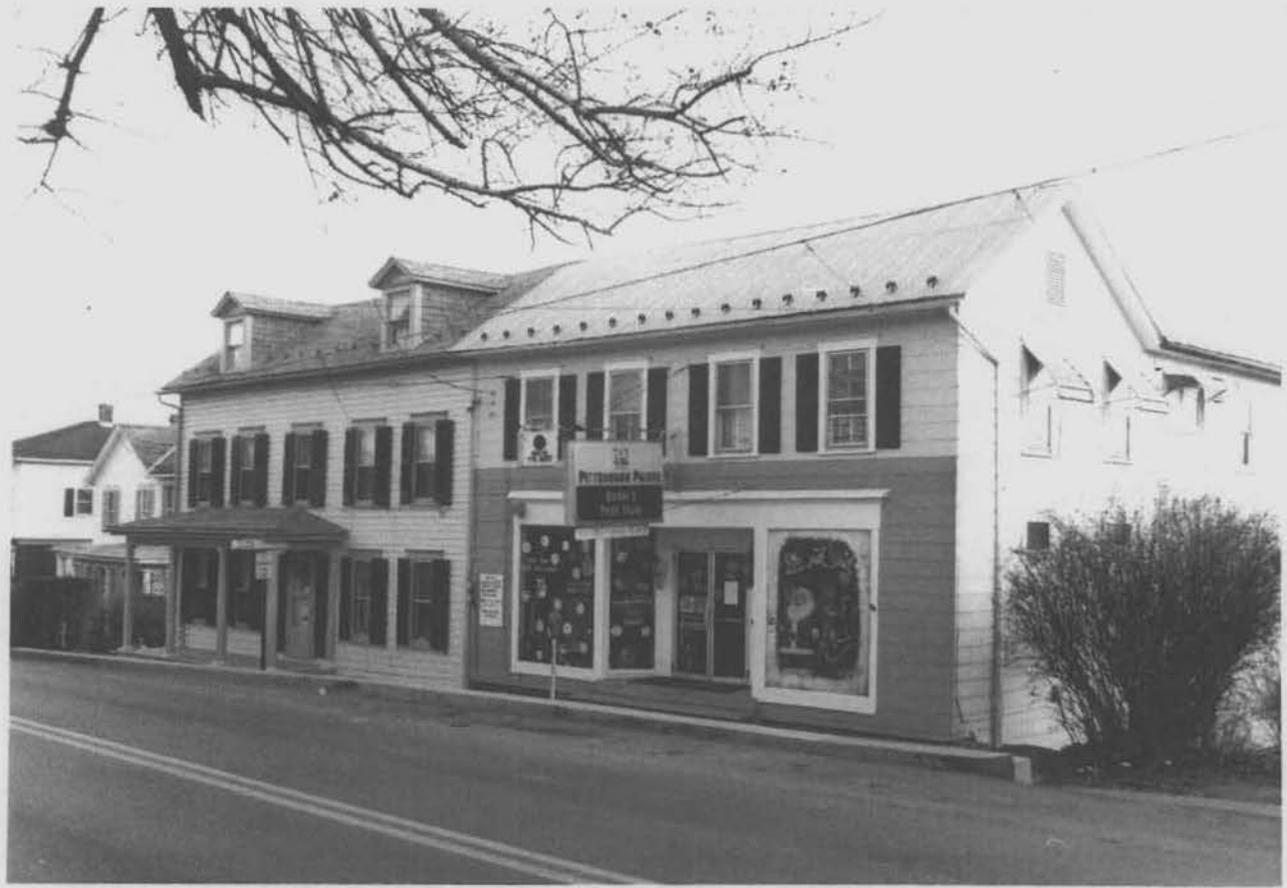

This is a two story sided log house with some Federal influences. The gable roof has two front dormers and is covered with asphalt shingles. It is a five bay structure with one over one windows. At the front is a three bay porch and there is a first and second floor porch on the rear of the house. The house is covered with wood lapped siding and is sitting on a stone foundation. This house reflects Hancock's early appearance and was the Creager family home. Mr. Creager was the town blacksmith in the late 19th century and had a shop behind the house.
