Description:

This house is a two story, five bay structure covered with aluminum siding. It is probably of log construction. The facade is formally arranged with a central entrance flanked by two windows. Windows have six over six pane sash. The main entrance is surrounded by a broad transom and sidelights. There is a three-bay entrance porch supported by square posts with brackets.

According to the 1877 Atlas map of Funkstown, this place was owned by J. Fiery.

It appears to date from the 1850s and is influenced by the Greek Revival style as evidenced by the entrance treatment (sidelights and transom). The prominence of this house and others along the National Pike reflects the importance of the National Road in the early and mid 19th century.
