Description:

This frame building, now used as a dwelling was probably originally a commercial structure. It is a two story, three bay Italianate style building with an added simulated stone veneer facade. Another added feature is a neo-Victorian hip-roofed porch. Windows have single pane sash except for those at the first story front which have been replaced. Entrances are located in the second and third bays from the west end. A distinguishing feature of the building is the low pitched shed roof and the prominent, bracketed cornice band across the front.

This building is not shown on the 1877 Atlas map. It looks as though it was built about 1880, and may be a commercial building converted to a dwelling.
