Description:

This combined apartment and commercial structure is a variation of the foursquare style and probably dates from the 1920s. It is stuccoed and has the characteristic hipped roof with dormer windows. It has an extended porch with a drive-through front. Windows have single pane sash and there are plate glass display windows at the first story front. The building seems to have been used as a service station and an automotive garage with the residential area above.

It relates to the second era of importance of the National Pike when in the early 20th century interest in the road was revived as automobile usage increased.
