Description:

This two story frame (possibly part log) house is a three bay structure covered with asbestos shingle siding. Depth of the window and door jambs at the first story suggest that it may be of log construction with a framed second story added. Windows have single pane sash with molded flat-topped architraves. The entrance is in the center bay of the front elevation. A porch extends across the front and has been modified by the replacement of its columns.

A house does appear on this lot in the 1877 Atlas map of Funkstown, as owned by W. Troxell.
