Description:

Located on the northeast corner of Antietam and Chestnut Streets is this frame American Foursquare style dwelling. Covered with German siding it appears to retain most of its original exterior features. It has the characteristic hip roof with hipped roof dormers. Windows have single pane sash within architraves with molded flat tops. There is a wraparound porch supported by round columns. Across the front elevation are four bays. There is a semi-hexagonal projecting bay at the west side of the south (front) elevation.

The house is significant for its intact quality representing early 20th century residential construction in Funkstown.
