Description:

This vinyl sided log house is a two story, three bay structure with a shed extension to the rear. Notable about the building is the fact that the placement of the second story windows is not at all related to the pattern of the first story windows. This suggests that the second story may have been added. Windows have two over two pane sash. The front entrance is located in the west bay of the front elevation. A hip roofed porch extends across the front. Its support system has been replaced.

A house does appear on this site in the 1877 Atlas map, belonging to H. Tritsch.
