Approximate date Ca.1890

The house which appears to have been greatly altered, is a two story, two bay light frame building covered with a combination of aluminum siding and older German siding. Its roof is nearly flat which may be either a modification, or a vestige of Italianate influence. It is located on the west side of Maugansville road and faces east. The overall form of the house is square, with a two story, two bay extension to the rear which appears to be part of the original construction. The house is two bays wide across the front with a door and a window at the first story level. Windows have two over two pane sash with those on the south elevation which seem to be original with peaked or pointed architraves, typical of the late 19th century. Also on the south elevation is a semi hexagonal bay beneath a shed roofed porch. A brick flue with a corbeled top extends from the interior of the house. A concrete block retaining wall separates the front of the house yard from the roadway. This house is unusual in Maugansville and represents the village's late 19th century development.
