Approximate date Ca. 1900?

This puzzling house is a two story, three bay frame building covered with aluminum siding. It has a central entrance and only two windows at the second story level, a house type common in Maugansville. The proportions for this building and details of its construction are different from others of its type. First, the second story windows are quite small, of a size usually associated with much older buildings. Secondly, there is an oddly placed window in the west gable elevation at the first story level with small, four over four light sash. Third, the chimney is in an unusual location, protruding from a point below the gable peak. Otherwise the house has typical turn of the century features such as two over two windows and a small corbeled brick chimney. A shed roofed porch supported by modern metal columns on a concrete deck is located at the front. The odd features of this house suggest that it may have been converted from some other use, into a dwelling.
