DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

These stone ruins are located on the south edge of Manor Church Road just east of the Antietam Creek between Tilghmanton and Boonsboro in Washington County, Maryland.

The remains of the two story dwelling are set into a steep bank at the edge of a grassy meadow. The building was constructed of coursed local limestone with its gable ends placed perpendicular to the road. Large stone lintels are set over the openings, some of which retain narrow wooden frames with mitered corners. An inside end chimney is constructed into the south gable wall.

Just east of the dwelling are stone foundations enclosing a small rectangular area. Immediately south of the ruins are the remains of a stone culvert consisting of a segmental arch of carefully cut local stones. The upper surface of the bridge is gone. The culvert apparently carried an old road across a small run which empties into the nearby Antietam Creek. The course of this road can be traced through the meadow.

The dwelling is said to have fallen down some years ago when blasting was done in the area. The ruins are located on a farm which contains about 154 acres. Also on this farm is a complex of dwellings described in form WA-II-189.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

These ruins along Manor Church Road are significant for the record they provide of a 19th century dwelling complex. The dwelling and the course of the old road which passed south of it are shown on a plat depicting the present route of Manor Church Road made in 1861 and included in Volume 2, Page 34 of the Washington County Road Records. The earlier road crossed the Antietam Creek at a place known as Schlosser's Fording, named for the family who had owned land in this area since the 18th century.

These ruins, situated in a hilly meadow at the side of the Creek also have great scenic value.
