DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Russell Farmhouse located on Geeting Road is a two and one half story, nine bay structure built in three parts. It stands on sloping ground on the west side of Geeting Road and faces east. Near the house is a spring which has been partially enclosed with a stone wall.

The central section of the house appears to be the oldest part probably dating from the late 18th century. It is a two and one half story, three bay log structure sheathed with old weatherboarding. At the rear or west elevation, the stone foundations are exposed to a full story in height. This section is built directly over a spring of water which emerges in a stone lined channel from the rear of the house. Nine over six pane windows are present at the main story level while six over six windows are used above. At the front, a two story porch at one time was added and later enclosed with siding at the upper level. Small six light windows were installed. The enclosure of the porch would appear to have occurred at the time of the second addition. This part of the house has two front doors separated only by the distance of approximately a foot. A large exterior stone chimney with a replaced cap of brick is located against the north end wall.

Attached to the south end of the original part of the house is a two story four bay addition which appears to be of frame construction. It also retains old siding which, characteristically is of fairly uniform width at the front elevation but of more random widths on the side and rear walls.

Windows in this section have six over six pane sashes of fairly uniform size from story to story. Two front entrances, are located in the center bays, each having a transom with diamond shaped panes. This part of the house would appear to date from the mid 19th century

Also probably dating from the mid 19th century, and, perhaps predating the south addition, is a one and a half story, two bay frame extension to the north. It has nine over six light sashes at its first story level possibly recessed from the original house. Its second story is contiguous with the enclosed second story porch.

Behind the house is a rectangular stone retaining wall part of which forms foundations for an unknown and long gone building. An old Ca. 1900 photograph pictured in Drums Along the Antietam by John Schildt shows that within the area of the retaining wall stood another house with an exterior chimney. The foundations in the corner of the wall held a small outbuilding.

The property also includes a frame bank barn which appears more recent than the house.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This farmstead is important for its architecture, for its association with a family prominent in religious history and for its proximity to the Civil War Battle of Antietam which occurred on September 17, 1862. Prior to the Battle, the farm was a place of encampment for the Union Army's Ninth Corps. and afterward it was a hospital site.

Architecturally, the house is significant as illustrating both 18th and 19th century building traditions with some Germanic influence in evidence.

This farm was the property during the late 18th and much of the 19th century of the Russell family. John Russell who resided on the farm during the mid 19th century was a minister in the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. In 1845 he was elected Bishop of the Church. At Christal Springs Farm he is said to have established a small theological seminary and the north wing of the house was reputedly added to house the students.
