DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The William Chapline House is located at 109 West Main Street in Sharpsburg, Washington County, Maryland. Situated on the north side of the street, forming the northwest corner of the town square it faces south.

The structure is a two story, five bay stone dwelling. A two story five bay shed roof addition of brick extends to the rear or north. The front elevation of the main section employs finely coursed local limestone while other elevations display less carefully cut rubble stonework. All windows are topped with flat stone arches. Several stones in the east gable were dislodged during the Civil War Battle of Antietam when a cannister shot struck the building. Alterations in the masonry of the front and east elevations suggest possible changes to the house. It appears that the south end window of the east elevation was converted from a door and that the door in the east end of the front elevation was originally a window.

The openings appear to have been spaced evenly in the front elevation. All major windows have six over six pane sashes held within narrow, rounded frames which probably date from the mid-nineteenth century. Original wide window frames joined with wooden pins remain at the attic level.

The main entrance, located in the center bay of the front elevation is elaborate. It consists of double four paneled doors over which is a broad transom with numerous rectilinear panes. The doors are flanked with plain Doric pilasters supporting an entablature. Like the windows, the entrance piece would appear to date from the mid-nineteenth century. The wrought iron entrance porch is present in a late nineteenth century photograph of the house. The secondary entrance in the east end bay of the front elevation is said to have been installed by Doctor A. A. Biggs during the mid-nineteenth century to provide access to his office. The stone doorstep is incised with his name. Other entrances are located in the rear elevation and in the addition.

The roof is covered with sheet metal and terminates with a barge board set directly against the end walls. Large stone chimneys finished with corbels are located inside each gable end. The eaves treatment consists of a course of decorative cornice work trimmed with a row of carved dentils just above the upper story window arches.

The brick addition displays common bonding. Its windows have narrow frames with beaded edges holding six over six pane double hung sashes. The present owners of the property report that foundations from an earlier structure were found beneath this section.

The interior of the main section is bisected by a stair and entrance hall. The stair, which is open to the attic, has a square newel with turned balusters. Decorative scroll work on the ends of the risers includes an unusual "pinwheel" form. East of the hall is a large room which appears to have served as a doctor's office under Hartman's and Biggs' ownership. It retains its original fireplace mantel and door trim. The opening in the partition between the two rooms was expanded to an archway circa 1950. West of the hall are two rooms of equal dimensions. The area is said to have been divided when the woodwork in the rooms was replaced during the mid-nineteenth century.

The brick addition is divided into two rooms, each with a fireplace. Several doors in this section, which may have been moved from the main structure, have six raised panels and show evidence of having had long strap hinges.

At the rear of the property is a small brick stable, its end walls pierced with geometric brickwork ventilators.

The house is in good to excellent condition.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The William Chapline House is significant for its architecture, for the role it played in the growth and development of Sharpsburg, and for its association with two of the area's physicians, particularly Doctor Augustin A. Biggs, who occupied the house during the turmoil of the Battle of Antietam in September of 1862.

The history of the house and its occupants is ably related in the attached research by Jeffery A. Wyand, executed in 1974.

Architecturally, the house is important as a well documented example of Washington County's late eighteenth century domestic construction, retaining a significant portion of its original woodwork. Although the five bay, center hall plan is typical of many of Washington County's stone structures dating from the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, the William Chapline House displays a degree of fineness of execution not apparent in many other houses.

Most of the alterations this house has received appear to have occurred during the mid-nineteenth century and are significant as expressions of that period as well as being linked with the role the house played during the Civil War.

The brick addition at the rear of the house would appear to date from the second quarter of the nineteenth century.

Three possessions of the Biggs' family have been acquired by the present owners and have been returned to the house: a nineteenth century sofa; a shaving mug which belonged to Charles Biggs, the doctor's oldest son, a one-time member of the Maryland House of Delegates who was born in the house in 1850; and a late nineteenth century family photograph posed in front of the house. A plan of the Antietam National Cemetery indicating its design by Doctor Biggs is also in the house.
