Continuation Sheet No. 1

WA-V-10

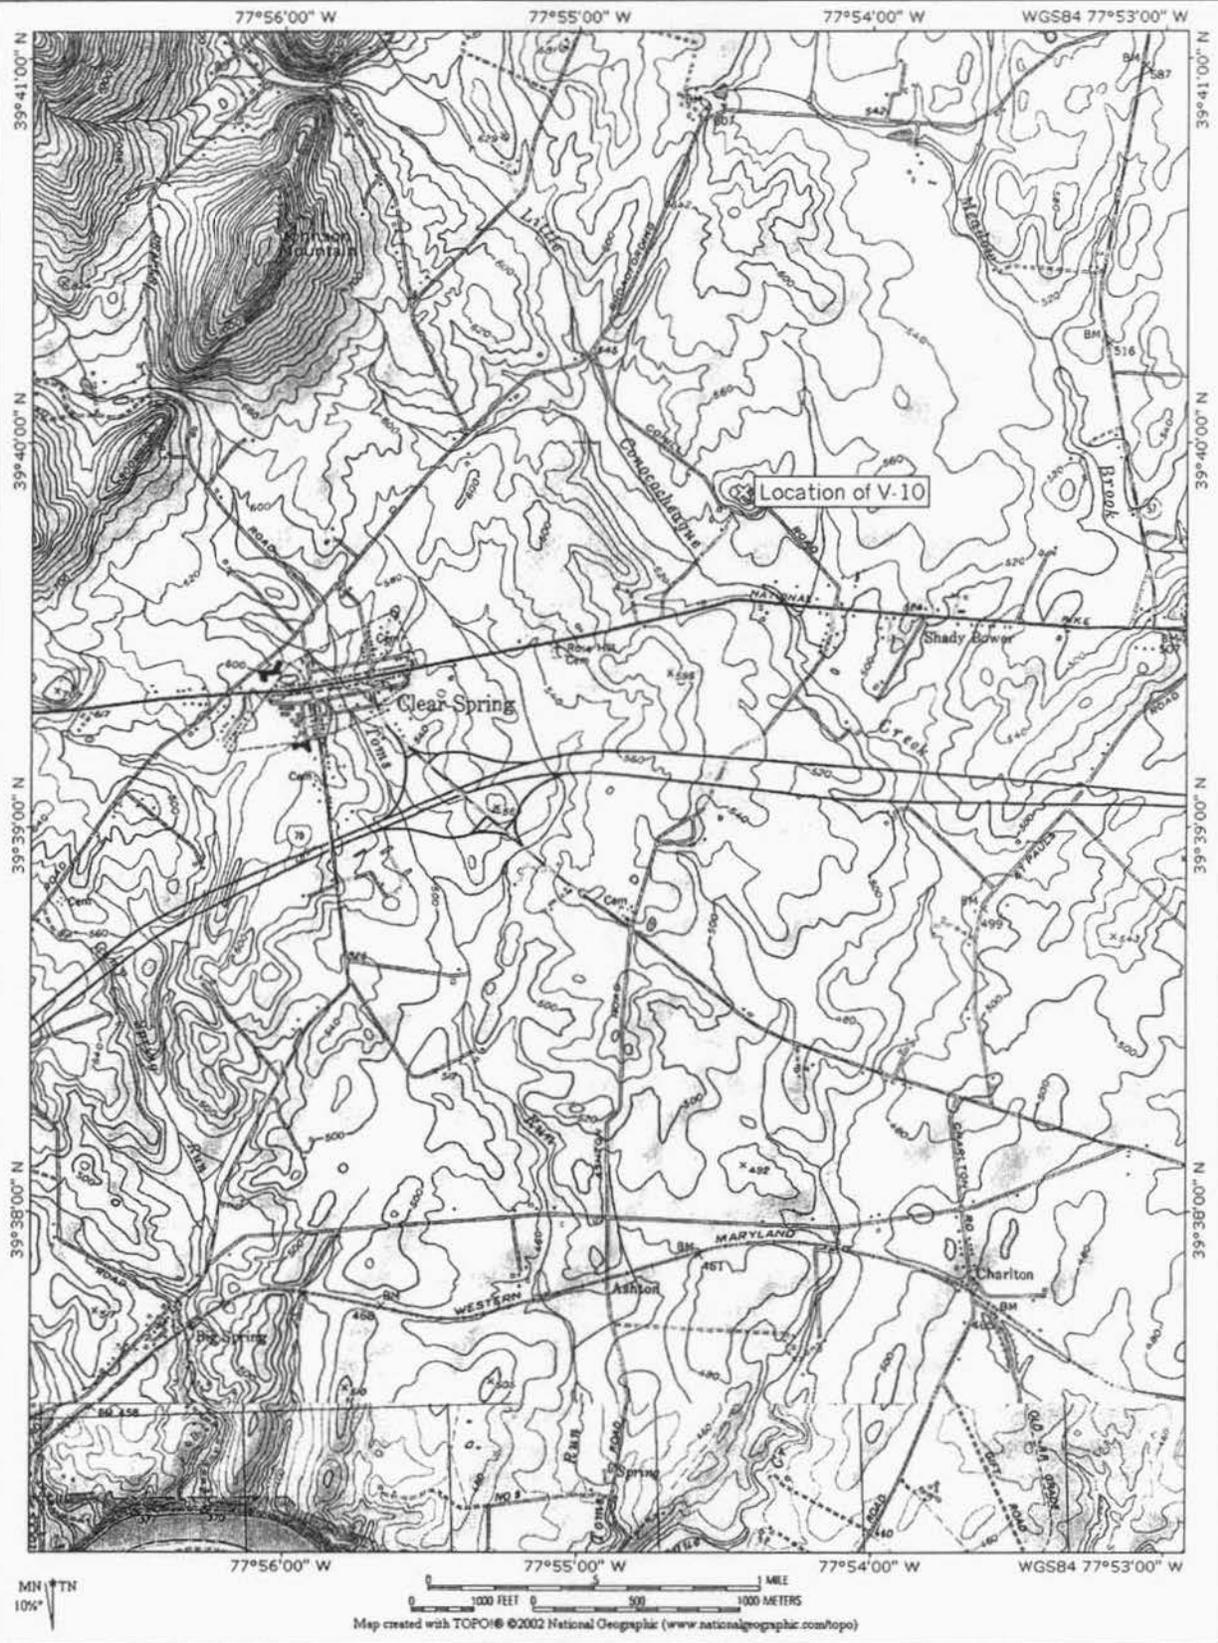

The house is described as

"a large two-story brick dwelling, ... with three bays across the central block which is flanked by symmetrical wings one bay in width. The central block has a hipped roof which is topped by a balustrade connecting double interior chimneys. The wings each have inside end chimneys. A small pedimented dormer is centered on the roof. Behind the central block and its wings is a long el consisting of two gable roofed sections connected on an axis and extending to the rear or north of the front section. The entire el is ten bays in length. Both sections of the el have inside end chimneys as well as interior chimneys. A [modern] one-bay, one-story entrance porch sheds the front door; also there is a double porch which extends along the length of the south portion of the el. Five square posts at each level support this porch."

The importance of the property in regional history (See WA-V-009), as well as the outbuildings and other intact contextual elements, make this property eligible for registration under Criteria B and C, "Person" and "Design/Construction", respectively.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
Stafford Hall is located just north of Cohill Road, ½ mile north of the junction with U.S. 40 about two miles northeast of Clear Spring in Washington County, Maryland. It is situated on a bluff facing south. The house is a large two-story brick dwelling, painted white with three bays across the central block which is flanked by symmetrical wings one bay in width. The central block has a hipped roof which is topped by a balustrade connecting double interior chimneys. The wings each have inside end chimneys. A small pedimented dormer is centered on the roof. Behind the central block and its wings is a long el consisting of two gable roofed sections connected on an axis and extending to the rear or north of the front section. The entire el is ten bays in length. Both sections of the el have inside end chimneys as well as interior chimneys. The roofs of all parts of the house are covered with sheet metal and painted green. Foundations of this house are of local fieldstone. At the front of the structure the foundations are not easily visible above the ground. At the rear of the front section and at the wings, the stone foundations increase to the height of a full story to accommodate the slope of the terrain. The brick walls are laid in common bond. There is little decorative work associated with the exterior walls, except for the flat arches over the windows of the facade and semi-circular recessed arches between the second story windows and the eaves of the symmetrical wings. Brick arches top an entrance to a passageway through the ground level of the northernmost section of the el. There is also evidence of a wide opening under a brick arch which has since been enclosed on the east side of the same section. The exterior woodwork is generally simple except for the elements of the facade. Plainly molded cornice and boxing finish the eaves of the front section and of the el. A simple board is placed at the ends of the roof at the gables of the el sections. Elaborate woodwork, however, is associated with the front door. The door opening is topped with a wide transom and is flanked by sidelights which carry double panes. Fluted doric colonettes are present on either side of the eight-panel door. Paneled jambs complete the entrance way. A one-bay, one-story entrance porch sheds the front door. It is a modern structure which is supported by plain square doric columns at the corners and plain round doric columns on either side of brick steps. The small dormer on the roof above the entrance shows considerable decorative woodwork. The only other expanse of woodwork associated with the exterior of the house is a double porch which extends along the length of the south portion of the el. This porch is supported by five square posts at each level. The house has numerous windows which vary in appearance and design. At the front section, the windows of the second story and the symmetrical wings contain six-over-six double-hung sashes. The lower windows which flank the main entrance have been enlarged to ten-over-ten sashes with the added panes separated by thick wooden decoratively molded supporting bars. There is little trim associated with the windows of the facade. Window openings in other portions of the house are generally small in size containing six-over-six sashes. The northernmost section of the el contains a part of small three-over-three pane windows under its eaves. Window openings in this section have architrave trim. The house has many doors all of which are much plainer than the front entrance which opens into a wide formal stair hall.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Stafford Hall's significance lies both in its history and in its architecture. Historically, it is worthy of note because it has had some prominent owners. Much of the early history of the property is unclear because of incomplete records. However, it appears that Dr. Charles Carroll was probably the first owner of this property which seems to have been part of a land grant called, "Hanover," dated June 10, 1750.¹ There is some evidence however that the land may previously have belonged to Evan Shelby who owned many thousands of acres in western Washington County. Deed records do not show the property called Stafford Hall until 1839 when several tracts (Montpelier, Stafford Hall, Woodside, Duddington, Millwood, Kaywood and Bradley's Farm) were sold by Abraham Barnes, Melchior B. Mason and John T. Mason to William Price and David Gost of Washington County (Liber UU, Folio 505). The records as well as local histories show that Abraham Barnes' name was really Abraham Mason and that he was bequeathed the estate of Richard Barnes of St. Mary's County, who owned approximately 5,000 acres, on the condition that he change his name to Barnes. The Barnes estate was known as Montpelier.

In 1844 the Stafford Hall property was transferred to Francis Dodge of Georgetown (Liber OHW 2, Folio 583). It was during Dodge ownership that a small Civil War skirmish occurred near the house.

William T. Hamilton, Governor of Maryland from 1879 to 1884 purchased the property at public sale in 1881 (Liber 81, Folio 564). According to local sources Stafford Hall was used as a summer home by the Hamiltons. The property remained in the Hamilton family until 1920 when it was purchased by Leo A. Cohill (Liber 157, Folio 532).

Architecturally, Stafford Hall reflects its several building periods. A detailed study of the interior and the structural evidence is necessary to form an accurate assessment of the history of its construction. From the exterior, however, it can be surmised that the front section is in a formal, classical revival style of the mid to late 19th century. The northernmost end of the rear el appears to have been built as a service area. Its tall, thin chimneys are reminiscent of houses in eastern Maryland. The section of the wing which is attached to the front portion of the house is possibly one of the oldest visible parts of the structure. With its double porches and rather stocky chimneys it is very typical of western Maryland architecture of the early 19th century.

It is apparent that this house was built in several sections. There are at this time no substantiated dates indicating when construction took place. The Maryland Historical Trust survey taken in the summer of 1967 lists a date of 1832 and the builder as Judge John T. Mason. Mason and two of his brothers did own the property in 1832, but it is unlikely that the entire mansion was built at that time.

The property contains 9.2 acres. In addition to the large dwelling there is also a "V" notched log outbuilding, chinked with soft mortar and chips of wood. The log structure has no fireplace or chimney. Nearby there is also a partially subterranean brick-topped root cellar, a structure not frequently found in the area.

The dwelling house is in excellent condition and is at this time in no danger of exterior alteration or destruction.
