First United Methodist Church Parsonage
Quantico
Private

1855

The First United Methodist Church parsonage is a virtually unaltered example of a mid-nineteenth century frame dwelling. Erected in 1855 for the use of the Methodist ministers that served this congregation, the house was erected in the prevailing Greek Revival taste with a gable-front elevation. Built on a small scale with a side passage/parlor plan, the single-pile house is extended to the rear by a two-story service wing. The interior woodwork also has historical significance with the signature newel post design found in several others houses in town.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The First United Methodist Church parsonage stands on the southwest corner of the intersection of Main Street and Cherry Walk Road in the center of Quantico, Wicomico County, Maryland. The two-story, gable-front frame house, located next to the First United Methodist Church, faces northeast with the roof oriented on a northeast/southwest axis.

Built in 1855, the two-story side hall/parlor house is supported by a low brick foundation, and the weatherboard frame dwelling is covered by a medium pitched asphalt shingle roof. Attached to the back of the single-pile front block is a two-story, two-room plan service wing which is extended farther west by a shed roofed addition.

The northeast (main) elevation of the parsonage is an asymmetrical three-bay facade with a side entrance and six-over-six sash windows flanked by louvered shutters. The four-panel front door is topped by a multi-pane transom. Sheltering the first floor is a turned post porch with a hip roof supported by turned posts. Between the posts is a row of decorative spindles. The second floor is illuminated by three evenly spaced six-over-six sash windows that also retain louvered shutters. Piercing the gable end is a multi-pane attic window.

The main block is only one room deep, and a single six-over-six sash window lights the first and second floors on the north and south sides. The window lintels have a shallow pediment, and louvered shutters remain on each opening.

The southwest (rear) elevation of the main block is largely covered by the two-story, three-bay service wing. An interior brick stack rises within the service wing and against the rear wall of the main house. The first and second floors of the rear wing are lighted by three six-over-six sash windows. A second chimney stack rises against the end wall of the service wing within the rear shed room.

The woodwork in the house parallels the design found in several other mid-nineteenth century Quantico houses. The unusual craftsmanship of the newel post is a signature feature shared by a handful of houses and probably points to the same master builder or carpenter.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The First United Methodist Church parsonage is a virtually unaltered example of a mid-nineteenth century frame dwelling. Erected in 1855 for the use of the Methodist ministers that served this congregation, the house was erected in the prevailing Greek Revival taste with a gable-front elevation. Built on a small scale with a side passage/parlor plan, the single-pile house is extended to the rear by a two-story service wing. The interior woodwork also has historical significance with the signature newel post design found in several others houses in town.

The well-preserved nature of this house and its important location at the intersection of Main Street and Cherry Walk Road qualify it as a Category A property, one that must be retained since it exhibits many good architectural details representative of a period of architectural development and contributes uniquely and superlatively to the character and collective value of the structures within the district.
