Taylor-Bounds House
Quantico
Private

c. 1820, c. 1840, 1855, c. 1880

The Taylor-Bounds house is one of the oldest and most prominent dwellings to remain in the town of Quantico. Dating from at least four different periods, the oldest section, a two-story side hall/parlor house, was erected around 1820-30. Comprising the southern three-bays of the seven-bay front block, the initial house was enlarged around 1835-40 by a two-story, one-room plan addition that produced a symmetrical five-bay elevation. In 1855 the house was enlarged again with the construction of the two-story gable-front frame wing. Around 1880-1900, the house was divided into a two-family dwelling with separate service wings built to the rear.

Although it is not certain who erected the initial side hall/parlor dwelling, the property was held by Edward Austin and later his son, Dr. John Austin, during the 1820s and early 1830s. In April 1835 John and Jane Austin sold a one-acre parcel of "George Gales Generosity" to James B. Moore, and the house probably stood on the lot at that time. Three months later James B. Moore sold the house and lot to physician John W. Taylor for $800, a price that indicates the lot was improved. Dr. John W. Taylor and his family appear in the 1850 U. S. census for Somerset County. The thirty-eight year old Taylor appears with his wife Mary E. Taylor, 35; and children, Virginia A. C. Taylor, 15; Rosella E. Taylor, 8; Mary W., 4; Jefferson Z., 1; and John W., Jr., a five-month old baby.

The house and other extensive lands were held by Dr. Taylor until the mid 1860s when a court settlement forced the division of his property. In the equity case, Rosella E. Taylor was the defendant and her brother-in-law, Levin Bounds and sister Virginia A. C. Bounds, were the complainants suing for a debt of $1800. Ultimately Levin and Virginia A. C. Bounds ended up with the Quantico house, and he is designated at this location on the 1877 town map.

Levin Bounds served in local government as a justice of the peace in Somerset and later Wicomico counties. He owned a dry goods store in Quantico. In April 1894 Virginia A. C. Bounds sold the house and lot to Judge Joseph L. Bailey, who resided here until his death in 1930. The property has remained in Bailey family hands to this day.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Taylor-Bounds house stands on the east side of Main Street in the village of Quantico, Wicomico County, Maryland. The two-story, seven-bay frame house faces west with the principal gable roof oriented on a north/south axis. Due to the large size of the house the structure has been converted to a two-family dwelling.

Built in at least four principal stages, the two-story seven-bay front block with two separate service wings, was begun around 1820 with the construction of a two-story, side hall/parlor frame house that comprises the southernmost section of the house. Around 1835 a two-story, one-room plan addition was built on the north gable end making the house five bays across with a center hall plan. Around 1855 it was decided to extend the house even farther north with the construction of a two-story, two-bay gable-front addition that had an individual entrance and front porch. During the late nineteenth century (c. 1880-1900) two service wings were built to the rear when the house was divided for two families instead of one. Supported on a continuous brick foundation, the house is sheathed with vinyl siding, and the medium pitched roof is covered with asphalt shingles.

The west (main) elevation of the main block is an asymmetrical seven-bay facade with the southern five bays comprising the oldest portions of the house. Framed between two brick chimneys, the five-bay facade has a center entrance sheltered by a gable roof porch supported on square posts with built-in seats. Flanking the six-panel front door are two-over-two sash windows that light the first floor rooms, and the windows retain louvered shutters. The second floor is marked by a slightly uneven spacing of two-over-two sash windows that have louvered shutters as well. The base to the roof is finished with a boxed cornice. The west face of the mid-nineteenth century gable-front addition is two bays across with a side entrance and flanking six-over-six sash window hung with louvered shutters. The raised-panel front door is topped by a diamond-shaped muntin transom. Sheltering the front door is a gable-front portico supported on square posts and retaining mid nineteenth century railings. The second floor is lighted by six-over-six sash windows, which have louvered shutters. Piercing the gable end pediment is a rectangular, multi-pane attic window.

The south gable end of the oldest section is dominated by an exterior common bond brick chimney that has corbelled shoulders. Two-over-two sash windows flank the stack to light the first and second floors. Small two-over-two sash windows light the attic. The gable end is finished flush.

Quantico, Maryland

The interior of the house survives with much of its original early to mid-nineteenth century woodwork. The front hall retains an early nineteenth century stair with a scroll decorated stringer, rectangular balusters and a circular profile handrail. Six-panel doors are framed by early nineteenth century molded surrounds.

The parlor to the south of the hall has an early twentieth century brick mantel, while early nineteenth century moldings remain otherwise. The room to the north, used as a dining room, has a Greek Revival influenced mantel with semi-detached Tuscan columns supporting a molded mantel shelf. The room is trimmed with second quarter of the nineteenth century door and window surrounds as well as baseboard and chair rail moldings.

The second floor of the early nineteenth century house retains many original features as well. The upstairs hallway has an enclosed staircase that provides access to the attic. A beaded board partition wall and flat six-panel door enclose the stair, and a small beaded board door provides access to a small closet beneath the staircase. A small room at the west end of the hall is entered through a doorway trimmed with an early nineteenth century surround. The small hall room is trimmed with original chair rail and baseboard moldings.

The bedrooms to each side, entered through six-panel doors, are fitted with Greek Revival mantels with semi-detached columns. Providing access to the rear wing are shallow profile four-panel doors.

The attic is unfinished with the common rafter roof system essentially unaltered. About mid-way through the attic there is clear evidence where the initial 1820s house ended and the 1840 addition begins. Gable ends studs with sheared cut nails on the former outside wall are still in place.
