Captain John Hagan House
Salisbury
Private

c. 1909

One of the unusual examples of Colonial Revival design in the Camden Historic District is the Captain John Hagan house, which is flanked north and south by more typical two-and-a-half story, center hall dwellings with colossal columned porticos. The Hagan house is less demonstrative in its architectural design with a Tuscan columned porch that stretches across the entire front and terminates on the south end with a gracefully planned curved bay and corresponding curved porch. The broad hip roof of the main block is defined by expressive cornice blocks that trim the perimeter of the house. Accompanying the house on the city lot is a contemporaneous frame garage that incorporates many of the stylistic features used in the dwelling. A steeply pitched hip roof has a broad eave punctuated with similar cornice blocks.

Construction of this well designed Colonial Revival house took place around 1909 following the purchase of the Camden Avenue lot by John Hagan, who was listed then as a resident of Worcester County. Thirteen years later, at the time of the 1920 United States census, Captain Hagan, a Norwegian by birth, was listed as a fishing fleet manager. He is grouped in the census with his wife, 40-year old Louella, three daughters, two sons, and his mother-in-law, Mary Quillen. The Hagans continued to hold title to the Camden Avenue property until 1923. Three years later, in May 1926, the house and lot were acquired by E. Homer White. White family ownership of the house continued until the mid 1970s.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Captain John Hagan house is located at 724 Camden Avenue on the northwest corner of the intersection of Camden and Virginia avenues in Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland. The two-and-a-half story, five-bay by two-bay frame house faces east with the principal roof oriented on a north/south axis. The house is joined on the lot by a contemporaneous single-story garage.

Built around 1908, the two-and-a-half story, five-bay, center hall frame house is supported on a raised brick foundation, and the exterior is clad with plain weatherboard siding. The main block is covered with a broad hip roof of slate that is finished with a wide eave. Attached to the back of the house is a shorter two-story service wing.

The east (main) elevation is basically symmetrical with five evenly spaced bays featuring a center entrance and flanking windows. The entire first floor is sheltered by a Tuscan columned single-story porch that wraps around each end. The center entrance is defined by a slight recess with flanking Tuscan columns and diamond-pane transom and sidelights. The front door is a replacement with a small window above the door knob. Flanking the recessed entrance are nine-over-one sash windows hung with louvered shutters. The Tuscan columned porch has a turned baluster railing that stretches between each column, and another balustrade trims the porch roof. Defining the second floor are five evenly spaced bays with a center door and diamond-pane sidelights. The flanking nine-over-one sash windows are hung with louvered shutters. The base of the hip roof is defined by a wide soffit trimmed with bold brackets. The roof is marked by a series of three hip roofed dormers. The center dormer is pierced by a four-over-four sash window and the front is trimmed with a flared surround. The smaller flanking dormers are fitted with three-over-one sash windows. Each of the hip roofs have sloped soffits.

The north end of the house is defined by a projecting bay window under the Tuscan columned porch that turns the northeast corner. The end elevation is defined by an asymmetrical fenestration of nine-over-one and six-over-one sash windows. The north slope of the hip roof features a single hip roofed dormer.

The south end of the main block is enhanced with a round bay of nine-over-one sash windows that is echoed in the rounded end Tuscan columned porch. Curved nine-over-one sash windows fill the perimeter of the rounded bay. The first and second floors are lighted by an asymmetrical fenestration of nine-over-one and six-over-one sash windows, and the south slope of the roof is marked by a hip roofed dormer.
