This large early 20th century colonial revival dwelling contributes to the Camden Avenue Historic District in design and setting. Camden Avenue Historic District is a middle and upper class residential neighborhood constructed in the late 19th Century and early 20th Century. The large houses reflect the architectural styles popular at the time and are set in spacious, garden-like lots. The district represents the development of Salisbury as county seat and commercial center for the Eastern Shore.

William Newton Jackson House
Salisbury
Private

c. 1860-70

Standing prominently on the southeast corner of Camden Avenue and Newton Street is a large two-and-a-half story, seven-bay frame dwelling long associated with the Jackson family. Historically named the William Newton Jackson house—after a long-term resident—the main block and the two-and-a-half story rear wing date to the third quarter of the nineteenth century. Distinctive to the house is its generous size as well as the series of segmental arched pediment dormers that line the steeply pitched gable roofs. The front block was built in two distinct stages. The initial house was a center hall, five-bay structure, and the southern two bays were added shortly afterwards.

William Newton Jackson and his family occupied this house during the early twentieth century. His father, William P. Jackson, acquired the corner lot from his father, William H. Jackson, in 1915. William H. Jackson evidently erected the house after his purchase of the lot from Purnell Toadvine in 1867. Both William H. and William P. Jackson erected highly elaborate and stylish new residences across the street during the late nineteenth century, thereby leaving the older Greek Revival inspired dwelling to the next generation.

In the 1920 United States Census, William Newton Jackson is listed as a planning mill foreman, and he is grouped in the same household with his wife Florence Rue Jackson, a two-year old, Florence, and a five-month old infant named Newton. Also residing with the family was an Irish servant, 30-year old Mary Lynch. The Camden Street residence remained under William Newton and Florence Rue Jackson's ownership until 1964.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The William Newton Jackson house is located at 501 Camden Avenue on the southeast corner of the intersection of Camden Avenue and Newton Street in the Camden Historic District, Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland. The two-and-a-half story, seven-bay frame house faces west with the principal gable roof oriented on a north/south axis.

Dating around 1860-70, the two-and-a-half story, seven-bay, single-pile main block was built in two distinct stages, evidenced by a seam in the continuous brick foundation between the fifth and sixth bays. The exterior is uniformly clad with aluminum siding, and the roof is sheathed with asphalt shingles. Attached to the back of the main block is a two-and-a-half story service wing that appears contemporaneous with the main block.

The west (main) elevation is a seven-bay facade with the northern five bays constituting the initial house. Centered in the original five-bay facade is a front entrance sheltered by a later single bay portico. A wider porch that formerly stretched across three of the five bays is clearly evident. Flanking the entrance are long six-over-six sash windows featuring molded lintels. The second floor is lighted by evenly spaced six-over-six sash windows trimmed with a lintel molding. Stretching across the base of the roof is a block cornice trimmed with bed and crown moldings. Defining the gable roof is a series of six-over-six sash dormers topped by segmental arched pediments. The roof of each dormer is covered with metal. Rising through the gable ends are interior brick chimneys.

The first story of the south gable end is covered by a single-story sunroom, which is defined on the corners by neoclassical pilasters. The sunroom is covered by a flat roof. Six-over-six sash windows light the second story on each side of the interior end brick stack. The gable end is finished with a boxed cornice that forms a neoclassical pediment trimmed the modillion blocks.

The east (rear) wall of the main block is largely covered by the two-and-a-half story, two-bay by two-bay service wing which has an interior brick stack and segmental arched dormer pediments. The first and second stories are illuminated by long six-over-six sash windows trimmed with a molded lintel.

The house has been converted into apartments.
