Description of Property and Eligibility Determination: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

This abandoned early twentieth century tenant house is located along Pratt Road west of Hounds Bay Circle. The house is overgrown and in the advanced stages of ruin. The house stands side-by-side with a second tenant house on the north side of the road. Both are two-story, single-pile, side-gabled frame structures with interior chimneys. Tenant House #2 is two-bays-wide. The remaining windows are 6/6 wood sashes. The house rests on brick piers laid in a stretcher bond. The house was originally sided in wood clapboard, but was refaced in asbestos shingles. Large gable-roofed canopies shade the single-leaf doors openings. The interior was inspected. Most of the wallboard has been smashed and vandalized; most of the fixtures and all of the woodwork has been removed; however the remaining evidence suggests an early-twentieth-century construction date, possibly between 1910 and 1930. Problematically, the house does not appear on the 1942 USGS topographical quad of the area. Behind (north) of both tenant houses are two shed-roofed frame structures; one is clearly a double privy while the second, in ruins, may have been a chicken house. Tenant House #2 is a typically modest early twentieth century vernacular domestic structures.. It is not associated with important individuals or events in history, and is not eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

Evaluation for:

National Register Maryland Register not evaluated

Prepare a one-paragraph summary statement of significance addressing applicable criteria, followed by a narrative discussion of the history of the resource and its context. (For compliance projects, complete evaluation on a DOE Form – see manual.)

Statement of Significance

Tenant House #2 is a typically modest early twentieth century vernacular domestic structure. It is not significant architecturally, nor does it retain architectural integrity. It is not known to have been associated with people or events significant to local, state, or national history, and in its current state of dilapidation, it is not adequately illustrative of tenant occupations of the Eastern Shore. Therefore, Tenant House #2 does not satisfy any of the National Register Criteria and therefore is not recommended for inclusion in the Maryland or National Registers.

Historic Context

Wicomico County was formed in 1867 from northern portions of Somerset and Worcester Counties. This region has been agricultural in character since its settlement in the seventeenth century. The late twentieth century, however, has been characterized by a loss of farmland and the growth of suburban development. As Salisbury, the county seat expands and the economy shifts from agriculture-based to commerce- and industry-based, the replacement of farm fields by housing units intensifies. New roads are built and old roads are enlarged or expanded to serve the changing and growing population, dramatically altering the character of the once-rural community.

The navigable Wicomico River has enabled settlement to occur along its banks since the seventeenth century. Tobacco, grain, and produce culture have been practiced successively on the land. As was typical of colonial settlement, major houses and plantations were built along the transportation routes, in this case the Wicomico River, while tenants and small-scale farmers occupied interior, less accessible and thus less valuable land. At some point in the mid-seventeenth century the Upper Ferry was inaugurated (Cooper 1991:251-253). The first Presbyterian meeting house was established near the ferry landing in 1706. In 1727, the county mandated the construction of a road to be maintained to the Upper Ferry, officially establishing the ferry landing as an access point for both transshipment of goods and for settlement (Slemons n.d.:3; Torrence 1979:359).

Around the turn of the eighteenth century, three hundred acres of land were held by Joseph Venables under the patent “What You Please” in the vicinity of the Upper Ferry, and including the Upper Ferry landing (Slemons n.d.:3). This land was passed to his son, Benjamin, after Venables’ death in 1717. It is unclear from the land records whether Venables’ land encompassed the land on which the tenant house stands, but it is likely. Irrespective of ownership, the land was certainly cultivated. Eighteenth-century tax documents from the Wicomico Hundred district of Somerset County describe earth-fast corn houses, storehouses, and log dwellings scattered throughout the Upper Ferry vicinity (Somerset Tax Roll 1798). Tax documents also indicate the types of substantial dwellings constructed in the area. Along the river at the Upper Ferry was a hip-roofed brick dwelling and numerous outbuildings belonging to William Anderson. The tax documents confirm that the major domestic structures and occupations were located along the river.

The late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries were a transitional period in agriculture. The pre-emancipation slave economy enabled farmers to work large, labor-intensive tracts of land at a minimum cost. In the post-war era, advances in agriculture coincided with advances in the transportation of fresh produce, and truck farming became prevalent on the Eastern Shore. The Eastern Shore Railroad served Salisbury starting in the 1860s, and soon fresh produce was expedited to markets along the eastern seaboard. The farms in the area appear to fit into the pattern of Eastern Shore agricultural transition from slave to tenant farming, share-cropping, and ultimately farm abandonment in the late-twentieth-century.
