Camden Avenue Apartment House
Salisbury
Private

c. 1928

The northwest corner of the intersection of Camden and College avenues is defined by a distinctive Colonial Revival frame dwelling erected as an apartment house by the Larmar Corporation. Dating around 1928, the two-story frame apartment block is distinguished by a hip on gable roof as well as stocky Tuscan columns that mark an open porch featured at each end of the structure. The balanced Camden Avenue façade has a pent eave, and the entrance is sheltered by a projecting hood supported on Craftsman-style triangular brackets. While incorporating distinct Colonial Revival elements, the Camden Avenue apartment block differs significantly from traditional early twentieth-century revival designs, thereby adding a contrasting architectural form to the streetscape of Camden Avenue.

Clearly one of Salisbury's most prolific developers during the first half of the twentieth century, the Larmar Corporation acquired the corner parcel, identified as "Lot No. 2 of a subdivision along College and Camden avenues. A 1928 mortgage to the Larmar Corporation from Henry W. Roberts signals the point when a substantial improvement was made to the corner lot. A year later, in September 1929, the mortgage debt was assumed by William P. Brown. William P. Brown maintained ownership of the apartment block until 1947 when it was acquired by John A. and Hannah McC. Kuhn.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Camden Avenue apartment house is located at 1018 Camden Avenue in the Camden Historic District of Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland. The house, built with an eastern exposure, stands on the northwest corner of the intersection of Camden and College avenues with the roof oriented on a north/south axis.

Built around 1928, the two-and-a-half story Colonial Revival inspired frame house is supported on a raised brick foundation with a partially excavated cellar. The exterior is clad in wood shingles. The combination hip on gable roof along with several dormers are covered with asphalt shingles.

The east (main) elevation is a symmetrical five-bay façade with a center entrance and flanking tripartite windows. The outermost bays are defined by open porches engaged under the roof. The entrance bay projects forward several feet from the main wall surface, and a partially glazed door is sheltered by a round arched hood and pent eave. The pent eave is supported by triangular Craftsman-style brackets. The pent eave continues across the main façade and ties into the slope of the main roof at the north and south ends. The first floor window openings are fitted with tripartite four-over-four sash and below each opening is a floor box. The north and south ends of the house are defined stocky Tuscan columns which also support the ends of the combination hip on gable roof. The second floor is lighted by a combination of small four pane windows that mark the center bay and six-over-one sash windows to each side. Centered on the hip roof is an eyebrow window fitted with a six-pane window.

The north and south ends of the house are largely alike with the Tuscan columned porches on the first floor and large hip roofed dormers lighting the second floor. Rising at each end partially exposed are brick stacks that which pierce the roofs of the hip roofed dormers. Piercing the inner porch wall are glazed French doors that open into the principal apartments on the first floor.

The interior was not seen.
