Anderson Mill House
Salisbury vicinity

c. 1840

Secluded on a quiet mill pond along Pemberton Drive is a two-story, three-part frame dwelling, formerly part of a large agricultural-industrial holding owned and operated by the Anderson family throughout much of the nineteenth century. The three-part frame house, sheathed with beaded weatherboards and finished with late Federal/Greek Revival woodwork, is estimated to date around 1840. Construction evidence and consistent use of mature cut nails throughout the structure, indicate that the three-part dwelling, designed with a rear hyphen and kitchen wing, was erected in a single building program. A Federal staircase, beaded board-and-batten doors, beaded joists in the rear kitchen, and a Federal mantel on the second floor are some of the significant features.

The house was probably built during the ownership of Isaac Anderson (1802-1875), who assembled an impressive Wicomico River and Rockawalkin Creek plantation during the second and third quarters of the nineteenth century. One of his early acquisitions was by way of his father Isaac's estate, which included 91 ½ acres of a tract called "Partner's Choice," located in the upper end of "Wrockawaiking." A series of tracts was purchased through the estate of James Anderson in 1832. Over the course of the mid to late nineteenth century the complex was called Anderson Mills, and the road connecting Salisbury and Upper Ferry was Anderson Road. Isaac Anderson, as well as his son, Henry W., owned three milling concerns on Rockawalkin Creek; a grist mill, a saw mill, and a carding mill.

Due to the indistinct boundary descriptions in the deeds, it is not clear on which tract of land the miller's house actually stands, but the house and mills were an integral part of a sizable agricultural-industrial holding identified as part of a larger rural community known as "Rocawakin Mills" when the Lake, Griffing, and Stevenon atlas was published in 1877. The rural mill community was actually stretched along a several mile course of Rockawalkin Creek. North of the Anderson mill complex, near where the Salisbury-Quantico road passed over the creek, there was a rural crossroads village that included the Wicomico Presbyterian church, another saw mill, a number of dwellings as well as "School No. 3." In fact, Isaac Anderson, along with Andrew W. Anderson and Levin J. Pollitt, was conveyed a small lot of ground for the school in February 1859.

At the time of Isaac Anderson's death in 1875 his estate passed to his son Henry W. Anderson, who is designated on the 1877 atlas map. The inventory of Isaac Anderson's estate included sizable amounts of sawn lumber, rough timber, or lumber products, which included for example "ten thousand feet round timber in mill race, 2500 feet three quarter boards, 150 shingles, 1400 ft. of inch and a quarter boards, etc." Also itemized in the inventory was "1 lighter," valued at $30, which was used to haul lumber products from mill to market.

As an executor of his father's estate, Henry W. Anderson assumed ownership of the Wicomico River and Rockawalkin Creek properties, and he sold the mill house along with 90 ½ acre to Paul Anderson in 1891, in whose hands the property remained until the turn of the twentieth century. On December 21, 1899, the miller's house and acreage was sold to a neighbor, Charles W. Layfield, at a public sale for $1,070. During the twentieth century the miller's house has been transferred numerous times until the present owner acquired the house in 1961.

8.1 SIGNIFICANCE

Anderson Mill House, WI-68
Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland

Due to indistinct or non-existent boundary descriptions in the deeds, it is not clear on which tract the miller's house actually stands, but the house and mills were an integral element of a sizable agricultural-industrial holding identified as part of a larger rural community known as "Rocawakin Mills" when the Lake, Griffing, and Stevenon atlas was published in 1877.⁴ The rural mill community was actually stretched along a several mile course of Rockawalkin Creek. North of the Anderson mill complex, near where the Salisbury-Quantico road passed over the creek, there was a rural crossroads village that included the Wicomico Presbyterian church, another saw mill, a number of dwellings as well as "School No. 3." In fact, Isaac Anderson, along with Andrew W. Anderson and Levin J. Pollitt, was conveyed a small lot of ground for the school in February 1859.⁵

At the time of Isaac Anderson's death in 1875 his estate passed to his son Henry W. Anderson, who is designated on the 1877 atlas map. The inventory of Isaac Anderson's estate included sizable amounts of sawn lumber, rough timber, or lumber products, which included for example "ten thousand feet round timber in mill race, 2500 feet three quarter boards, 150 shingles, 1400 ft. of inch and a quarter boards, etc." Also itemized in the inventory was "1 lighter," valued at $30, which was used to haul lumber products from mill to market.⁶

As an executor of his father's estate, Henry W. Anderson assumed ownership of the Wicomico River and Rockawalkin Creek properties, and he sold the mill house along with 90 ½ acre to Paul Anderson in 1891,⁷ in whose hands the property remained until the turn of the twentieth century. On December 21, 1899, the miller's house and acreage was sold to a neighbor, Charles W. Layfield, at a public sale for $1,070.⁸ During the twentieth century the miller's house has been transferred numerous times until the present owner acquired the house in 1961.⁹

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Anderson mill house, located at 27108 Pemberton Drive, is situated on the west side of the old Anderson mill pond west of Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland. The two-story, three-part frame dwelling faces east with the principal gable roof oriented on a north/south axis.

Estimated to date around 1830-40, the three-part frame dwelling was built in a stepped or "telescope" form with a two-story, side hall/parlor main block and a story-and-a-half dining room/kitchen wing. Attached to the back of the story-and-a-half service wing is a hyphen and rear kitchen now converted to a small den. Supported on a minimal brick foundation, the exterior is sheathed with a combination of beaded and plain weatherboards, and the medium to steeply pitched roofs are covered with asphalt shingles.

The south (principal) facade is two-part elevation with the two-story, three-bay wall of the main block juxtaposed next to the story-and-a-half, three-bay service wing. The main block is defined on the first floor by a side entrance and a pair of six-over-six sash windows that light the first floor. The front door is a replacement. The second floor is illuminated by three six-over-six sash windows. Each window and door opening is framed by a simple square-edged backband. Trimming the base of the roof is a boxed cornice accented with a simple Greek Revival crown molding. The beaded weatherboards that sheath the house are continuous between sections. The dining room and kitchen wing is defined by an uneven fenestration of three six-over-six sash windows. Marking the roof is a pair of large double-width gable roofed dormers added around 1940.

The east gable end of the two-story side hall/parlor house is dominated by an exterior common bond brick chimney featuring corbelled shoulders at the second story level. Small two-over-two sash windows light the attic. The gable end is finished with a plain bargeboard.

The rear wall of the main block is defined by an asymmetrical fenestration of six-over-six sash windows. A single double-width dormer pierces the roof of the dining room wing. Attached to the back of the kitchen is a single-story hyphen and kitchen wing that was built on a perpendicular axis to the rest of the house. This section was reworked during the 1960s as a bathroom and den. A sliding glass door was added to the east side and a rebuilt chimney stack is located on the north gable end. The exterior was resheathed with plain weatherboard siding.

The interior has been remodeled several times over the years. Knotty pine paneling was installed in the parlor and dining room. A Federal style staircase remains in the side hall. Square cross-section newel posts and stick balusters support a circular profile handrail. Beaded board and batten doors survive in several locations on the first and second floors. A late Federal style mantel remains in the second floor bedroom. A series of beaded-edge tie beams are the principal original feature surviving in the back kitchen that now serves as a den.

Across the road and on the other side of Rockawalkin Creek are a few remnant timbers of the Anderson mill.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Secluded on a quiet mill pond along Pemberton Drive is a two-story, three-part frame dwelling, formerly part of a large agricultural-industrial holding owned and operated by the Anderson family throughout much of the nineteenth century. The three-part frame house, sheathed with beaded weatherboards and finished with late Federal/Greek Revival woodwork, is estimated to date around 1840. Construction evidence and the use of mature cut nails throughout the structure, indicate that the three-part dwelling, designed with a rear hyphen and kitchen wing, was erected in a single building program. A Federal staircase, beaded board-and-batten doors, beaded joists in the rear kitchen, and a Federal mantel on the second floor are some of the significant interior features.

The house probably dates from the ownership of Isaac Anderson (1802-1875), who assembled an impressive Wicomico River and Rockawalkin Creek plantation during the second and third quarters of the nineteenth century. One of his early acquisitions was by way of his father's estate, which included 91 1/2 acres of a tract called "Partner's Choice," located in the upper end of "Wrockawalking."¹ A series of tracts was purchased through the estate of James Anderson in 1832.² Over the course of the mid to late nineteenth century the community was known locally as Anderson Mills, and the road connecting Salisbury and Upper Ferry was Anderson Road. Isaac Anderson, as well as his son Henry W. Anderson, owned three milling operations on Rockawalkin Creek; a grist mill, a saw mill, and a carding mill.³
