St. Mary's Episcopal Church parish house

Furnacetown

Public

St. Mary's Episcopal Church parish house is an unusual Gothic Revival frame building that was relocated to Furnacetown property northwest of Snow Hill around 1980. Its original location on Third Street in Pocomoke City was directly across the street from St. Mary's Episcopal Church. The three-part frame structure now serves as exhibit space at the iron furnace park museum. Distinguished by its gable front and pointed arch openings, the interior is noteworthy as well for its vaulted beaded board ceiling. Attached to the back of the main block is an early building, reported to have been used as a school by the Episcopal church. The earlier sash with nine-over-nine windows suggests the early to mid nineteenth century date. The third and shortest section appears to be a late nineteenth century addition.

The history of St. Mary's Episcopal Church includes the construction of a small church school, and it apparently opened for instruction on April 3, 1848 with Mrs. Sarah Sarah L. Love serving as the initial teacher. The church history relates the building was moved across what is now Third Street to a lot that had been given to the church by Sallie Jones. The early to mid nineteenth century features of the center section agree with this tradition.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

St. Mary's Episcopal church parish house is a single-story, three-part frame building located at Furnacetown in the vicinity of Snow Hill, Worcester County, Maryland. The parish house formerly stood in Pocomoke City and was relocated on the furnace property around 1980. The parish house currently faces west with the gable roof oriented on an east/west axis.

Supported by a concrete block pier foundation, the weatherboarded parish house consists of three distinct parts. The front section, dating to around 1870, appears to have been an addition to the center section which is an early nineteenth-century one-room structure. The third section dates evidently to the late nineteenth or early twentieth century. The three sections descend in height from front to back and are covered by asphalt shingle roofs.

The west (main) elevation is a three-bay facade with a center entrance and flanking windows. The four-panel door is marked by diagonal and vertical beaded board panels, and fixed above the entrance is a Gothic arched six-pane transom. The six-over-six sash windows to each side are also topped by fixed Gothic arched windows as well. The louvered shutters that flank the windows retain wrought iron strap hinges. Extending past the wall surface are the eaves which are finished as the base with short returns. The north and south walls of the main block are pierced by single six-over-six sash windows also fitted with louvered shutters hung on wrought-iron strap hinges.

The east wall of the main block is largely covered by the earlier single-story, two-bay center section which is lighted from the north and south by pairs of nine-over-nine sash windows with single board-and-batten shutters. The boxed cornice above is trimmed with bed and crown moldings.

The third and shortest section is a one-bay by one-bay frame office with a small two-over-two sash window piercing the south wall and paired two-over-two sash windows light the office from the east. The gable end is flush.

The interior of the two front sections is consistently fitted with narrow tongue-and-groove beaded board wainscoting and vaulted beaded board ceilings. Four-panel doors permit passage between rooms.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

St. Mary's Episcopal church parish house is an unusual Gothic Revival frame building relocated on the Furnacetown property north of Snow Hill. Originally located in Pocomoke City, the three-part frame building was moved to its present site around 1980, and it is now used for exhibit space and an office. The gable-front principal elevation is most noteworthy with its repetitive Gothic arched entrance and flanking windows. Attached to the back of the main block is an early nineteenth-century one-room plan section that evidently stood independently before the front block was attached around 1870. The interior of the former parish house is distinctive as well with narrow tongue-and-groove beaded board wainscoting and a vaulted beaded board ceiling. The third section was added as a small kitchen for the parish house.
