Justification for decision: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map)

The Pennington Farm is located on the east side of US Route 113 north of its intersection with Georgetown Road in Worcester County, MD. The property, on nearly 42 acres of land, consists of a dwelling and nine associated outbuildings. The property is not considered eligible for individual listing on the National Register of Historic Places.

Built in 1935, according to the documentation, the main dwelling on Pennington Farm is a 1-1/2-story frame bungalow. Set upon a brick pier foundation, the house is covered with a wide, gable roof with a shed-roof dormer and exposed rafter ends. Now enclosed by apron walls, the west elevation once possessed a cut-away porch enframing two of its three bays. The house has been further altered by the addition of asbestos shingle siding and stands in vacant and deteriorating condition.

The house is surrounded by several domestic and contemporaneous out buildings and associated agricultural buildings, including, most notably a long, one-story chicken house and a gambrel-roofed barn. Although the property retains much of its original secondary buildings, all of the buildings are in deteriorating condition and lack the architectural distinctiveness and integrity necessary to qualify the property for individual listing on the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C.

The property is not known to have any associations with persons or events significant to our past and is thus not eligible for listing under Criteria A or B.

Documentation on the property/district is presented in: Review and Compliance Files

The Pennington Farm located on the east side of US Route 113 (Worcester Highway) north of its intersection with Georgetown Road in Worcester County, Maryland, consists of a dwelling and nine outbuildings surrounded by a grass lawn, mature cedar trees and vegetable gardens on nearly 42 acres of agricultural land. Although 12 acres of the parcel contain woodland, portions of the property immediately surrounding the house and related buildings are intensively cultivated.

The Pennington farmhouse consists of a one-and-one-half story frame bungalow with an asphalt-shingled gable roof and a small shed roof dormer piercing its western slope. A flemish bond brick foundation underlay the main, western elevation while rusticated concrete block composes the foundation of the other three elevations. A corbeled brick interior chimney penetrates the south gable end. A second, thinner brick chimney rises from the edge of the dormer. Ornament includes exposed rafter feet and craftsmanesque brackets in the eaves. Asbestos siding covers most exterior wall surfaces.

Although now enclosed by apron walls and screens, the west elevation once possessed a cut-away porch enframing two of its three bays. Brick pedestals supporting chamfered wood piers that composed elements of the porch have been incorporated into the screen enclosure. A large two-over-two sash occupies the northern bay of the west elevation. A group of four two-over-two sash flank the opposite side of the centrally-placed bungalow door. Four bays consisting of three two-over-two sash and a triple two-over-two penetrate the south elevation's first story. Four-over-four wooden sash flank the interior chimney pile in the south gable peak.

Southwest of the dwelling stands an elongated, rectangular one-story chicken house. Possessing a corrugated tin sheathed gable roof, the frame chicken house now functions as a storage shed. Wooden shingles and weatherboard both serve as exterior siding. Fenestration primarily consists of six-over-six sash and board-and-batten doors.

A one-story frame shed with weatherboard siding and a corrugated tin shed roof lies east of the chicken house. Another frame, weatherboarded shed is located further east. This second shed possesses a tin gable roof, six-light fixed sash and board-and-batten doors. A horse corral lies east of the second shed while a dilapidated shed-roofed, frame shed has nearly caved in on the east side of the corral perimeter.

Adjacent to the north end of the corral is a gambrel-roofed, weatherboarded barn/stable. Standing-seam tin covers the barn's roof and flared eaves. North of the barn/stable, across a dirt drive, stand a row of five frame outbuildings: two sheds, a corn crib and two garages. Four the five possess gable roofs. The crib exhibits terra cotta piers and a standing seam tin roof. Both garages display clapboard siding and asphalt shingled roofs. The easternmost of the five buildings, a shed-roofed shed sheathed with wood shingles, is collapsing.

Page 8.1; Significance

Built in 1935 according to county tax records, the Pennington farmhouse and its related outbuildings help document agricultural trends in Worcester County during the early twentieth century. Boasting nine surviving outbuildings serving the varied requirements of the farm, the Pennington Farm reflects the mixed-crop cultivation and animal husbandry practices that evolved in the county in this period.

County farms raised an array livestock, including cattle and poultry. Corn and other grains formed a significant portion of the county's agricultural production as well. As evidenced by the Pennington Farm's chicken house, barn, corn crib and storage sheds, the Pennington property participated in these wider trends associated with Worcester County's past.

Possessing good integrity of location, design, setting and feeling, the Pennington Farm is recommended for inclusion on the Maryland Inventory of Historic Properties under Criterion A, broad patterns of history.
